FOREWORD

It is a matter of great pleasure that the "Kāśmīra-Śaivadarśana-Bṛhat-Koṣa" is being published by Shri Ranbir Kendriya Sanskrit Vidyapeetha, Jammu, which is one of the constituent units of Rashtriya Sanskrit Sansthan, New Delhi.

Kāśmīra Śaivism has its own weightage and importance in the fields of Indian Philosophy and āgamas. We generally find two types of Śaivism–one is Śaivāgama, widely known in south India and the other is "Kāśmīra Śaivism" popular not only in Kashmir but also all over India and abroad. The four main features of Śaivāgama of south India are – vidyā or jñāna, kriyā, caryā and yoga. The śaivāgama offers rich literature in Sanskrit language. Some of the texts of āgamas have been published from Pondicherry and other places. These books on āgama are used by temple priests of southern śivālayas as a manual of alayārcana. There are numerous unpublished texts of these āgamas in the form of manuscripts that belong to the arcakas of various śivālayas. These āgamas deal with both architectural and iconographical subjects belonging to devālayas. Besides these texts describe various methods of rituals to be performed in devālayas like naityika and naimittika worship of the Lord. The philosophical thoughts are described occasionally.

The texts of Kāśmīra Śaivism mainly deal with the philosophical aspects like śivatattva, śaktitattva, sṛṣṭi, dīkṣā, vidyā etc. Kriyā and other subjects are also delineated in "Kāśmīra Śaivism", but they have not been given much importance. In fact, "Kāśmīra Śaivism" is decidedly a rare section of Indian Philosophy that minutely deals with the philosophical matters. It deals at length with both the theoretical and practical aspects of spiritual philosophy. The theory is dealt logically and the practice in tune with psychology. It throws light on the method of several such topics of Śaiva Yoga, about which all other Schools of Indian thought are more or less silent. With a view to facilitate scholars and students of Sanskrit and indological studies to grasp the nuances of conceptual and theoretical details of Kāśmīra Śaivism, a project had been initiated by the name of "Kāśmīra-Śaivadarśana-Bṛhat-Koṣa Project" by the Rashtriya Sanskrit Sansthan in one of its constituent Vidyapeethas at Jammu in the year 1980 as result of good efforts of Dr. R.K. Sharma, the then Director of Rashtriya Sanskrit Sansthan, and Dr. Mandan Mishra, the then Principal of Shri Ranbir Kendriya Sanskrit Vidyapeetha, Jammu.

The philosophy enshrined in Śaivadarśana is profound and requires detailed and comprehensive study of the subject. At present very few learned scholars are available for undertaking research, teaching and guidance on the subject. It is important to point out that most of the books on the subject have been published from Kashmir series, Srinagar, the seat of Śaivadarśana learning. The valuable literature on this rare subject is fast depleting owing to the fact that the books on the subject are either not available or out of print and very few scholars are available to deal with the subject. The objective of this Koṣa is to facilitate research study in the subject and to preserve this rare knowledge. Consequent upon the decision that followed, Dr. Baljinnath Pandita an eminent scholar and an authority on Kāśmīra Śaivism had been appointed as Project Director with some assistants to help him in the scheduled research work. The Project was completed in 1990. All the important words relating to Kāśmīra Śaivadarśana have been systematically arranged in alphabetical order in the Koṣa and explained wherever felt necessary.

The Koṣa is spread over in two volumes – the first volume contains letters from the beginning to letter "ञ" i.e. last letter of 'च' varga and the second volume from 'ट' varga upto the end. Dr. Pandita has made an undaunted effort to highlight the historical and philosophical interpretations of Kāśmīra Śaivadarśana through an elaborate upodghāta in Sanskrit and an Introduction in English.

I extend my sincere thanks to Dr. Baljinnath Pandita for the compilation of the Koṣa. I laud the efforts of Dr R.K. Sharma and Dr. Mandan Mishra (former Directors of Rashtriya Sanskrit Sansthan, New Delhi) for their guidance and encouragement rendered to the Project from time to time. My thanks are due to the Principal, Shri Ranbir Kendriya Sanskrit Vidyapeetha, Jammu and those who worked with the project for their efforts in the preparation and publication of the Koṣa.

INTRODUCTION

History of the development of philosophy goes back to the beginning of the growth of human civilization. Even the earliest civilized human societies had started to find out some correct answers to some philosophical quarries regarding man and his universe. Questions that arose on such topics in the minds of some early thinkers were like this : --------"Who am I? What am I? What is the real and final aim of my life? How is such aim to be attained? Why this birth, death and consequent misery? How can it be ended? How has the phenomenon come into existence? Who creates , manages and governs it? Out of what substance has it been created"? Such quarries have been compiled, briefly, by Śaṅkarācārya in his Aparokṣānubhūti (*A.An.*12). Thinkers in the West, having been urged by love for humanity, proceeded to solve such problems about man and his universe by the means of deep mental pondering, aided by refined wisdom and sharp intelligence and conducted through rational reasoning and logical argumentation. Such developments happened in India also, but our ancient thinkers and original teachers of such subjects depended much more on direct intuitional revelations of the truth regarding such problems and used the above mentioned mental faculties just as aids to form clear conceptions about the truth and to express such impressions to others. All their such mental and vocal activities proceeded in accordance with their intuitional experiences of the truth, attained by them through some practices in Yoga. While proceeding on the paths of their mental and vocal faculties, they did not, generally, deviate from the truth as revealed to them, directly, during the practice of Yoga. But there remained certain questions with regard to the phenomenal existence, which did not at all become clear during several types of the Samādhiyoga, because such yogic revelation, transcending the field of all phenomenal manifestations, does not reveal anything about any phenomenal entity. It reveals only the actual character of an individual pure consciousness, shining an individual being. Most of the ancient Indian thinkers tried to solve such philosophical riddles by means of rational imagination, aided by some scriptural statements, drawn from Vedas and Upaniṣads. But the higher importance given to Yogic revelations did not come down by any degree in their such mental and vocal efforts in the field of philosophy.

Philosophy is known in India as Darśana. Darśana means a direct revelation, a direct experience, an independent enlightenment, not depending on any mental faculty of thinking, understanding and reasoning etc. Such instrumental aids of knowledge do not find any place between the discoverer of the truth and the truth discovered by him. Darśana is a direct revelation or enlightenment. It is an intuitional experience of the self by the self. No prominent logical element of philosophical thinking did, thus, find any important place in the process of Darśana in ancient India. As said above, such elements were used only in the process of expression and such expressions drew authority from scriptures. Such Darśana of India was practised and realized by long lines of Aupaniṣadic teachers and their disciples for several millennia of years. The practitioners of Darśana did not bother to conduct logical discussions or debates. They had, instead, some frank discussions based on direct realization of the truth. The logical aspect of philosophy was later given a forceful start by Gautama Buddha, some time during the middle of the third millennium of the age of Kaliyuga. He is said to have advised his listeners not to believe in the correctness of his sermons, so long as they were not logically convinced. Logical thinking did thus replace the ardent faith and the place of adherent practice was usurped by logical discussions and debates. Such turn in the development of the Darśana-Vidyā of India got a very strong philip from the powerful royal patronage of great emperors like Aśoka and Kaniṣka, as well as from a strong support of later powerful kings like Harṣha. Such process of a radical change in the growth and development of Indian thought had a strong influence on the traditions of the ancient Indian Darśana, proceeding on the basis of Upaniṣads and Āgamas. Some of such, mutually, conflicting trends in the growth of Indian Darśana gave rise to the development of six Vedic schools of thought, four main schools of each Vaiṣṇavism and Śaivism, four important schools of Buddhism and several schools of Jainism in India and Darśana came, thus, very close to philosophy, and the two names started later to be used as synonymous. There were such saints in Europe as well, who proceeded on the path of the direct realization of the truth through ardent worship and constant meditation. But they did neither get any royal patronage nor any intelligent and ardently devoted admirers. Their teachings did not, therefore, spread among scholars in general. Thus such teachings of the saints in the west did not develop as any schools of philosophy. These are even now counted in Europe among mysticism, which is often placed there outside the field of philosophy.

But, inspite of such upheaval in the field of the development of Indian philosophy and its growth ahead, the basic masters of most of such schools of thought did not lose their faith in, or adherence to, the practice of Yoga, yielding an intuitional realization of the philosophical truth. They continued still to have face to face realization of the truth about man and his phenomenon by the means of practice in Yoga, though, in course of time, such actual-practitioners of Yoga were reduced to a negligible minority and the field of philosophy came into the hands of dry logicians, well-versed in discussions and debates, aimed, mostly, at gaining royal patronage in the courts of some big states in India. But it remained yet a fact that some ardent Yogins were still taken as the masters of different schools of thought. Thus, the ancient masters of Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika were practical Yogins, practising the Pāśupata system of Yoga. Sāṁkhya-Yoga philosophers practiced the Yoga system of Kapila, an ancient sage of India. Different schools of Vaiṣṇavism patronized the practice of the Yoga taught in Pāñcarātra-Āgamas. Schools of Śaivism in the south used to propagate the practice of Yoga as taught in Śaiva Āgamas. That was the position in ancient ages. In the medeval times, the writers of works on Nyāya, having forgotten the practice of such Āgamic Yoga; took refuge in the Yoga of Patañjali. The great Śankarācārya and his grand preceptor, Gauḍapāda were prominent Yogins practising the Tāntric Yoga of Śrīvidyā. Vijñānavāda, the most prominent sect of Buddhism, is still known as Yogācāra on account of its special adherence to the practice of Yoga, for the purpose of having a direct realization of the truth. During the long process of such academic development, the Darśana of India, though coming, sufficiently, close to the subject known as 'philosophy' in the west, did not, totally, lose its basic Darśana character, consisting of direct intuitional realization and revelation. But alas ! it is now losing such character just on account of too much importance having been given to fake thesis, prepared by young and inexperienced scholars, for the purpose of mere material gains, under the administration of India by public leaders having, actually no, interest in the ancient cultural heritage of India.

A question arises here as to why is there so much mutual difference in the basic philosophical principles and doctrines of the different schools of thought in India, when all of them are, basically, derived from the intuitional realization of the truth, revealed by the means of Yoga. The answer to such objection lies in the differences in Yogic discoveries regarding the character of life as it functions in different states and sub-states, of animation as well as in the different higher and lower varieties of Yoga through which such character of life is, directly, realized. The character of the self and the phenomenal existence, as discovered by the Yogins of India through their intuitional insight, can be classified into four main types of waking, dreaming, sleeping and the revelationally one. The waking existence, called Jāgrat-Sattā, is gross in its character. Beings residing in it conduct their functions through their gross forms. This world of ours is one of its typical examples. Such existence is known in Indian philosophy as the waking existence. The finer existence of gods, semi-gods, ghosts and fore-fathers, etc. is the subtle existence, termed as the dreaming existence or Svapna-Sattā. Beings in such existence work through their subtle mental bodies, consisting of mind, intellect, ego, senses and organs, all in their subtle forms. They function, nearly, in the same manner in which we, the waking beings, do in our dreams. The still finer existence is the sleeping one, called Suṣupti, the dreamless sleep. Enlightened beings, having realized themselves to be such pure individual I-consciousness, that transcends even mind and all mental apparatus; but not having had the realization of their divine potency, belong to such existence. They do not have any miseries of the, worldly, life, do not at all indulge in any mental or physical activities, relax, constantly, on perfect tranquillity, and rest, motionlessly, like the pure space. Theirs is an elevated existence, an existence of partial liberation. The fourth type of existence is that of such liberated beings, who have had a direct realization of the, exactly, real, self, along with its divine character. They relax, joyfully, while enjoying the tastes of their purity, infinity and the bounties of divine potency. Such beings consist of, only, the pure and divinely, potent I-consciousness, which should not, however, be confused with ego. They relish, blissfully, the sweet awareness of their divine potency. Such existence is known as Turyā, the fourth type of existence. It is, in fact, an existence of yogins to whom the correct nature of the self is already revealed.

The animation of ordinary beings, like we people of this world, does also move up and down, through all these four varieties and our functioning in them is known as the four states named Jāgrat, the waking one, Svapna, the dreaming one, Suṣupti, the sleeping one and Turyā, the fourth one of self-revelation. The waking state of animation is not of any special interest from our philosophical view-point. A type of Yogasamādhi, focussed towards the dreaming state of animation, revealed to our ancient religious teachers, the nature of such subtle existence of heavens, hells, etc., as well as the religious paths that can lead an aspirant to heaven and can save him from falling into hell. Such teachers of India developed the Mīmāṁsā philosophy. Many other religions of the world do also have philosophies and religious doctrines believed to be leading to heavenly, existence of various types.

Most of the, highly, prominent schools of Indian philosophy are, generally, based on the revelations of the sleeping state of animation, known as Suṣupti. It was attained by our ancient sages by the means of yoga practices, focussed against the nature of the self, as it exists and shines in the sleeping state. It is not, however, necessary that each and every such Yogin should have one and the same type of such revelation, because it varies in accordance with :— (i) the nature of the concerned types of sleeping existence, (ii) various standards in the merits of different Yoga practices and (iii) the variety in the intellectual and vocal capacities of different Yogins. It is on such account that our ancient Yogins gave start to different schools of philosophy, agreeing on some points and disagreeing on others. Yogins having the realization of the truth, as it shines in the fourth state of animation, named Turyā, the state of spontaneous revelation of the real nature of the self, did not appear in India in such a big number as did those who rested in the sleeping existence. Then there are several types of the Turyā as well. Therefore,, the Yogins of such higher standard do also differ in some of their special philosophical principles and practical doctrines of theology. An outline of such varieties of Indian philosophy is given here, so that a reader develops in his mind a correct notion about the comparative merits of Kashmir Śaivism, the philosophy of life, shining at the highest step of Turyā, the position of a charming intuitional revelation of the purest nature of the self, as well as that of the, exactly, real nature of all phenomena.

The revelation of the truth, as it shines at the initial step of Suṣupti, the sleeping state of animation, was attained by some Vedic practitioners of Pāśupata-Yoga and they developed the philosophy of Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika. They discovered the finest aspect of the self as being the pure individual consciousness, having no propensity towards any activities of, whatsoever, character, though possessing the capabilities to know, to do, to like, to dislike and so on. An individual being, having realized such pure character of his self, attains freedom from all kinds of misery and turbulence and lies in an eternal peace and absolute tranquillity, just like the pure space. His consciousness does not yield any fruit other than such undisturbed and eternal tranquillity. Such position of a being, having been named as Apavarga, was proclaimed by Nyāya-Vaiśesika Yogins as the final goal of life. It is, in fact, the picture of the self, as it shines at the initial step of sleeping animation and, as it was revealed to logicians by a successful practice in the Yoga system of Pāśupatas. Some other Pāśupatas, who were not ardent logicians, and who worshipped Paśupati Śiva in the manner of Nāṅga monks, living in cremation-grounds, discovered the nature of the self as it shines at the initial step of Turyā. Their position shall be clarified ahead.

The Nyāya-Vaiśeṣikas did not discover the real essence of the phenomenal existence in their Yoga-Samādhi. Therefore, taking help from some Vedic scriptural passages, they built such system of theistic philosophy which propounds the theory of the creation of all phenomena by God, the only omniscient and omnipotent supreme authority, out of atoms which have been accepted there as eternally existent components of the whole physical existence. Besides, they accepted the eternal existence of several entities like time, space, mind, souls, etc. All creation, preservation and dissolution is, according to their view, worked out, administered and conducted by God in accordance with the divine law of 'karman', which cannot be ignored even by that supreme authority. All such principles of their philosophy, regarding the phenomenon and its creation, etc. were established by the teachers of Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika through their intellectual calculations, aided by scriptural passages and their fine wisdom. Inference, worked out on the basis of experience, and scriptural authority, was, mostly, resorted to by them in proving the correctness of their principles. So far as their Yoga-Samādhi is concerned, it did not provide them with any solution about the problems regarding the phenomenon, because that did not at all appear in such Samādhi, which is a finer variety of Suṣupti, the state of simple animation that does not at all allow any objective manifestation.

The teachers of the Sānkhya-Yoga system reached a step deeper into the sleeping animation and, discovering the self as free from all turbulence, caused by mind, intellect, ego and all the senses, found all mental activities as the functions of non-self, attached somehow to the self. Using their finer wisdom and finding some support in some scriptural passages of Upaniṣads, they built the theory of transformation of Mūlaprakṛti, the root substance, known as Pradhānatattva, the principal substance as well. Such Tattva is, precisely, the same substance as the cosmic energy of the modern physics. Such teachers of philosophy declared that the root substance, undergoing, outwardly, a series of transformations, appears, gradually, in the forms of intellect, ego, mind, senses, organs, subtle and gross objective elements and all these combine into the emergence of the whole universe, consisting of multitudes of subjects, objects and instrumental elements. Thus, they discoverd the source of atoms and many other eternal elements of the Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika in the cosmic energy. Having immense adherence to the Yoga system, taught by the ancient sage Kapila, they prescribed the practice of Yoga, discussed later in the Yoga-Sūtra of Patañjali, as the means to realize the fact that the self of a being is, in fact, absolutely, tranquil, having no turbulence of knowing, doing, desiring, etc. and also to see all such turbulence as a wonderfully complex transformation of Prakṛti, so much so, that one should, actually, feel that he does not have any real relation with any mental or physical transformation of Prakṛti. Having developed such discriminative knowledge in them, they become free from all the transformations of Prakṛti and, consequently, do not take up any other physical body after their death. Prakṛti has no personal motive in clinging to, wordly, beings in the form of their mental and physical form. The, only, two motives behind such activities of Prakṛti are :- (1) fructification of the past actions of ignorant beings and (2) development of the above mentioned discriminatory knowledge in them. As Prakṛti does not see any motive in clinging on to the person of a being who has earned such discriminative knowledge, she leaves him all alone, withdrawing all senses, organs and mental apparatus from him. Consequently, such a being does not take up any other body and becomes free from the cycles of births and deaths. Lying, absolutely, alone, he stays eternally, in such position of loneliness, the Kaivalya of the Sānkhya-Yoga systems and that has been said to be the final aim of life. Seeing all the phenomenal changes as different modifications of Prakṛti, and finding them as happening, spontaneously, on account of the basic nature of such basic element, the teachers of Sānkhya philosophy did not bother about God and His Godhead. Patañjali, the author of Yogasūtra, accepts Īśvara as an eternally, liberated, being, having been the preceptor of all the ancient Yogins like Kapila and having the correct knowledge of every thing in the universe. Īśvara has not been, thus, accepted as the Almighty God, the master ruler of the whole universe even in the Yogasūtra, though meditation on Him has been accepted as helpful in attaining perfection in Yoga and in calming down obstacles in its practice.

The Vijñānavādin and the Śūnyavādin thinkers in the tradition of Buddhist thinking, putting their sharp intelligence into action, while taking into consideration, the nature of the self at a still finer position in the sleeping state of animation, realized a continued flux of momentary I-consciousness (Alaya-Vijñāna) as the element taken, generally, and wrongly, as the Ātman or a soul of a being. They termed it as Vijñānaṃ, that is, a momentary mental consciousness. Comparing the phenomenal existence, along with all its functions, with the mere apparent objective existence of the dream world, they worked out the two principles of :- (i) non-existence of all objective entities outside the field of consciousness and (2) the false appearance of their individual self shining as 'I', caused by some past impressions, lying in the flux of Vijñāna, the flow of mental consciousness (not the pure consciousness). Besides, they discovered the annihilation of all the past impressions and the consequent stirless flow of simple and motionless momentary mental consciousness as the final goal of life. The Śunyavādin Buddhists, going still deeper in the dreamlessly, sleeping animation, discovered the final attainable position as the perfect extinction of the flow of the light of I-consciousness. Both, such positions are known in Buddhism as Nirvāṇa, meaning, extinction of the flow of the momentary mental I-consciousness, talked about as Ātman. In the view of a Śivayogin, that is the picture of the truth as it shines at the finest step of sleeping animation. It is the state of perfect sleep, devoid of even the active impressions of the dreaming and waking states. All the entities, appearing in the mental and physical existence, were taken by such Buddhist thinkers as some non-existent and, merely, apparent phenomena, just like those appearing in our dreams.

Most of the Yogins in the tradition of Advaita Vedānta did also have, nearly, the same type of revelation about the nature of the self and the working of the phenomenal existence. The Nirodha-Samādhi of Vedānta did also reveal to practitioners a sort of nihilism and, consequently, they also declared all the physical and mental phenomena to be non-existent, comparing them with the children of barren women. But even then they had a peep into Turīyā state, the state of spontaneous revelation of the real nature of the self, shining as the base on which the flux of momentary mental consciousness stands. Therefore, they announced the real nature of the self of a being as consisted of eternal, infinite and pure I-consciousness. They discovered such single and pure consciousness as the real self of each and every being and declared its nature as being consisted of pure existence and infinite consciousness, having blissfulness as its essential character. So far as the phenomenal existence of physical and mental entities is concerned, they declared it as appearing, merely, on the basis of the ignorance of, worldly, beings and compared it with our dream-world. The pure infinite consciousness, termed as Brahman, was declared by them to be the, only really, existent truth. They denied the real and separate existence of any beings other than Brahman. Like the Vijñānavādins and the Śūnyavādins, they also found the cause of the appearance of all physical and mental phenomena in the basic ignorance of worldly beings. Since no physical or mental entity enjoys any real existence, they did not accept the authority of any real master as its ruling administrator. Therefore, they denied the real existence of God, soul and the universe, though for the purpose of the attainment of success in the practice of Yoga, leading to Nirodha-Samādhi, they advised to conduct worship of God, just as an aid to such Yoga and also as a mean to get, worldly and heavenly, pleasures, which are, generally, desired only, by ignorant beings. The individual existence of all, worldly and heavenly, beings was declared by them as, simply, appearing on account of our basic ignorance. Once a being sheds off his such ignorance, he feels that he is none other than Brahman, the only existent reality. As soon as such a being sheds off his physical form, at the time of death, his individuality gets at once dissolved and he starts to shine as Brahman alone. That is the Brahma-Nirvāṇa or Mukti, which is announced by Vedāntins as the final goal of life. Such Advaita Vedāntins explained the theistic teachings of Upaniṣads as the lower Vedānta, meant for a lower category of aspirants and accepted their purely, absolutist teachings as the higher Vedānta, meant for, highly, meritorious aspirants. It was on account of such leanings of the Advaitins towards the nihilistic views of the Buddhist thinkers, that some Vaiṣṇava philosophers called them "Pracchanna-Bauddhas" or crypto Buddhists. Abhinavagupta takes such Brahmavāda as a theory coming very close to Śūnyavāda.

All the above mentioned schools of thought have accepted the existence and the effect of the past impressions of the beginningless ignorance as the basic cause of the miserable position of all, wordly, beings.

None among the ancient or later teachers of such schools did ever care to devote his intellect and Yogic practice to find any answer to some great philosophical problems like a few given below :— "Where from did the basic ignorance (Avidyā) emerge? What could have been the cause of its emergence? Whom could it involve? Could it have involved Brahman, the only existent reality"? If so, the absolute purity of Brahman is gone. It could have, no doubt, involved an ignorant being, if such a being would have existed at all in addition to Brahman. But such argument would refute the principle of the absolute monistic unity propounded by Vedānta. If Avidyā, the basic ignorance, is so powerful as to manifest beings other than Brahman, and also to involve them in bondage, it may continue to do so even after the attainment of the revelation of the truth through the practice in Nirodha-Samādhi. The principle of the beginninglessness and causelessness of the basic ignorance of beings in bondage is such a locuna, which spoils the merits of all the above mentioned schools of Indian thought, as it amounts, logically, to a sort of escapism. The Advaita Vedānta accepts, openly, the inapplicability of Avidyā.

Such logical problems of philosophy were solved, satisfactorily, by Śaiva-Śākta scholars of thought and, to some extent, by some schools of Vaiṣṇavism. The teachers of such schools approached the problem, not only, through the faculties of head, but also through those of heart as well. Adding a devotional attitude to Yogic investigation of the truth, they realized absolute theism as the essential character of the basic reality, called by them, respectively, as Śiva or Śakti or Nārāyaṇa. Their practices in devotional Yoga of the Āgamic origin revealed to them the basic nature of the self as it shines at different steps of Turyā state, the fourth state of animation, consisting of spontaneous and intuitional revelation of the truth about the self and its environment. Such explorers of the truth, penetrating into the deepest levels of the secrets about the basic truth, found absolute theism as the essential nature of the absolute and the basic reality known in India by many names like Ātmana-Paramātman, etc.

Such devotional practitioners of Yoga discovered the origin of all phenomena in the theistic nature of such basic absolute authority, called God. They saw the whole, worldly, process of creations, etc. as the playful manifestation of the divine power and nature of God. Besides, they prescribed such devotional worship and practices in Yoga, which can lead to the exact realization of the basic character of the self as well as that of God, along with His divine powers. Such devotional Yoga can lead aspirants either to a close union with God or to an absolute unity with Him, with the result that they, getting freedom from misery, start to taste the blissfulness of the divine powers of God.

The Turyā state of animation, discovered by such devotional Yogins, is also of several higher and lower steps. Aspirants reaching its lowest step, discover themselves as servants and associates of God, though they also do taste the bounties of Godhead. They like to stay on at such lowest step of Turyā, the step of sheer pluralism or Bheda. Devotees discovering the truth at the second higher step of Turyā have the realization of Bhedābheda, that is, monodualism. They see themselves as being, partly, identical with God, as, well as partly, different from Him, just as the grains of a pomegranate fruit and the fruit itself as a whole are seen as, mutually, different and identical. The third higher step in Turyā reveals monism and aspirants with such realization see themselves as not at all different from the absolute reality. That is Abheda. Many teachers of such philosophies in the South gave them a mythological covering by depicting the absolute reality as a personal God, living in His divine abode and being worshipped there by all the realized souls as His devotees. Most of the Vaiṣṇava teachers, like the Pantheists in the West, avoided absolutism and preferred their stay in such abode of their personal God. The Śaivas of the South did rather confuse absolutism with such theism, depicting a personal God. But the Śaivas of Kashmir laid sufficient weight on the absolutist character of God. Even the dualistic and monodualistic Śaivas of Kashmir rose high above such divine abodes of a personal God and prescribed such paths of devotional Yoga, which could lead to pure spiritual position of Bheda as it exists in the state of Mahāmāyā, where all beings have the experiences of the bounties of infinite devine essence of Godhead, but do yet see themselves as being different from God and from one another. That is, in fact, the initial step of Turyā existence. These are the Śaivas of the school of Amardaka. Those of the school of Śrīnātha see themselves, as partly, different, as well as, partly, non-different from the absolute reality. The aspirants of the Tryambakā school of Śaivism discovered their absolute unity with Parama-Śiva, the Absolute God. The same has been the case with the aspirants belonging to the Ardha-Tryambaka school of Śaivism, which flourished at Jālandhara-Pīṭha, the modern town of Kāṅgrā in Himāchal Pradesh. All such schools of Śaivism in the North adhered to absolutism along with theism. Their theory is, thus, a theistic absolutism. The Śaivas of the South were less absolutist in their view. Most of them followed cults devoted to Śiva as a personal God, though there has been sufficient agreement with Kashmir Śaivism in their views on practical Yoga methods of Āgamic origin. The clearer pictures of the truth, as it shines at the first three steps of the Turyā type of amimation, are, thus, the philosophical views of the schools of Amardaka, Śrīnātha and Tryambaka. The psycho-physical capacities and situations of all the aspirants in the world are not of one and the same standards. Therefore, the philosophy of Kashmir Śaivism proceeded through such view-points of diversity, diverse-unity and perfect unity, so that aspirants could choose paths suited to their psychological standards and aptitudes.

There is a vast difference between the two monistic philosophies of Advaita Vedānta and Kashmir Śaivism. The Śaivism of Kashmir, unlike such Vedānta, traced out the root cause of all phenomena within the divine essence of the Brahman of Vedānta, known here as Paramaśiva. Śiva-Yogins realized themselves as non-different from the absolute reality, the Parabrahman of Upaniṣads and the Paramaśiva of Śaivism. Unlike the Advaita Vedāntins, they did not see the absolute Godhead as something imposed on Brahman by Māyā, the universal ignorance, but, like the seers of Upaniṣads, they discovered it as the essential character of the absolute reality. All the functions of Godhead were discovered by them as the essential character of that reality.

The only absolute reality, revealed to them through practice in the highest method of Trikayoga, consists of that, absolutely, pure consciousness, which knows no limits of time, space and causation, etc. It is such infinite consciousness which was seen by them as their real self. They discovered limitless blissfulness as the essential character of that infinite consciousness. Such blissfulness was seen by them as constantly, becoming, playful and the consequent playfulness was revealed to them as manifesting outwardly the divine powers of the Absolute, in the manner of reflections. Such outward reflections of the divine powers of the Absolute were seen by them as the apparent manifestations of all the thirty-six Tattvas, all the seven categories of beings, all the planes of the phenomenal existence, all the heavens, hells and human worlds situated therein and all the pure, impure and semi-pure souls, as well as all the activities of creation, preservation, absorption, self-oblivion and self-revelation, and everything about bondage and liberation, and so on. All this is manifested in the manner of such a dramatic performance, in which the divine powers of the Absolute do serve as stage, costumes, actors, characters, emotions, sentiments,audience, etc. of this limitless universal drama, managed and directed, solely, by the wonderful divine powers of the monistic absolute consciousness, endowed with all capability of such exuberances.

A blessed person in this world has to study the Śaiva scriptures and philosophical works composed by ancient masters of Śaivism and has to seek initiation in Śaiva system of Yoga. Then he has to practise some of its many varieties and, as a result of such practice, he has to discover his, exactly, real nature and to recognize himself, thus, as none other than that absolute and pure I-consciousness (not to be confused with ego), which is infinite in nature and, possessing all the infinite divine powers, is always playing, exuberantly, the eternal play of Godhead through the five main activities of creation, preservation, absorption, self-oblivion and self-revelation. An aspirant has to tread such path of Yoga and knowledge through a, highly, devotional attitude. Such an attitude is always helpful in attaining quick success in Yoga and in saving the practitioner from any temptations to misuse some superhuman powers that do, occasionally, develop in such a Śivayogin. Having recognized his real nature of Śivahood, he has to pass the remaining portion of his mortal life as a *Jīvanmukta,*imparting the knowledge of the theory and practice of Śaivism to worthy persons. At the end of his mortal life, he either merges into the infinite consciousness or attains some position of sweet authority in the long hierarchy of divine administration. Having enjoyed there, the tastes of the divine authority, he, shedding off that divine individuality, becomes, finally, one with the Absolute. This is, in short, the sum and substance of the monistic Śaivism of Kashmir and is, essentially, based on actual intuitional experiences of Yogins.

This Śāstra, according to tradition, came down to this world through some constant chains of preceptors and disciples, beginning with divine personalities like Śrīkaṇṭhanātha Lakuleśa, etc. and coming, gradually, down to human beings. When, in the course of such transmission through generations of human teachers, it lost much of its essence and became very faint in its character in this world, Lord Śiva, in the form of Śrīknaṭhanātha at the Kailāsa mountain, sent down three perfect beings to this world for a fresh propagation of this Śāstra. They were the, previously, mentioned Amardaka, Śrīnātha and Tryambaka, who started to propagate the philosophy of Śaivisim through the view-points of dualism, monodualism and monism, respectively. Tryambaka gave start to two monistic schools of Śaivism, respectively, through his son and daughter. He was himself imparted the perfect knowledge of the theory and practice of monistic Śaivism by sage Durvāsās. His sixteenth descendent, named Saṅgamāditya, came to Kashmir, in time about the eighth century, A.D. and settled here, permanently. His school flourished here, abundantly, and many Siddhas, known as Maṭhikā-Gurus, appeared in it. They obtained the divine scriptures of Śaiva monism from some divine sources and propagated their teachings to aspirants in Kashmir. The tradition of that school of Tryambaka continued to flourish in the Valley of Kashmir up to the present disturbances, created by militant Islamic fundamentalists, under the rule of the so-called secular leaders at the centre, who have a greater interest in daydreams of establishing a socialistic pattern of society and who do not, consequently, mind the annihilation of the, highly, valuable cultural treasures like the tradition of the monistic Śaivism. The other school of Tryambaka was flourishing at Kāṅgrā in the time of Abhinavagupta, but now there is no trace of it anywhere in the country. The two shcools of Amardaka and Śrīnātha were also flourishing in Kashmir in the time of Abhinavagupta. Amardak's school had extended its influence even up to the Tamil land in the South. But the local traditions of both schools have now, totally, vanished away. Śaiva monism of Kashmir has had, thus, a very ancient origin and spread and was just reorientated by Tryambaka, to whom it was imparted by sage Durvāsās in the Kailāsa region of greater India of the past. Such history of the origin and spread of Kashmir Śaivism has been recorded in the ninth century by Somānanda in his Śivadṛṣṭi. Abhinavagupta (10th century) also has given some information about it in his Tantrāloka and Jayaratha (12th century) has quoted passages from some ancient Śaiva scriptures in such context. The historical account given in Śivadṛṣṭi may appear to most of the modern scholars as a mythological description, but some authentic historical evidences can prove such tradition to be correct. Some clear evidences can throw light on the, constantly, prevalent tradition of Śaivism, right from the hoary past. Such evidences include archeological findings and references in ancient literature as given below : —

The most ancient archeological evidences, found at places like Mohenjodaro, Harappa, Mughal-Guṇḍai (in Balūchistān), Gudimalam (in South), etc. include phallic emblems, ring-shaped Yoni emblems, typically, chiseled Lingas, Yonis and mother Goddess figures, Tāntric diagrams, an idol of three headed Paśupati Śiva, figures of Yogins in Samādhi with serpents standing erect and guarding them on either side, and the bust of a Śiva-Yogin with his eyes half shut and his sight directed towards the tip of his nose, reminding the description of Śāmbhavī-Mudrā of the Trika system of Kashmir Śaivism. Such evidences prove that Śaivism was the religion of the masses in India in the prehistoric ages and most of its religious practices, as well as the tradition of Śāmbhava-Yoga, were prevalent in India in those ages.

Continuation of different religious and theological elements of Śaivism, especially, that of the practice of Śāmbhavī-Mudrā, as well as the, gradually, developing popularity of Śaivism among the Vedic Āryans, can be proved by the facts listed below : —

1. Initially, Rudra of Ṛgveda, who had somehow become identified with the Paśupati Śiva of the Indus Valley people, was counted as a non-popular Vedic deity.

2. The Śūlagava rite, as given in a Kalpasūtra, proves that the sacrificial beast, offered to Rudra, was sacrificed outside the fire altar.

3. Transfer of the supremacy of Vedic gods, from Indra of Ṛgveda to Rudra of Yajurveda, indicates a victory of Paśupati Śiva, (with whom Rudra had got identified), over the gods of Vedic Āryans; which can have happened, gradually, by the growing influence of Indus-Valley people over the Vedic Āryans through mutual give and take; especially, because the ancient Vedic Āryans were less civilized shepherds, while the original people of Indus basin were, highly, advanced in civilization, as they were a city people, living on agriculture, trade and commerce.

4. The Dakṣa episode of Mahābhārata proves two historical facts : —

i) Śiva (Rudra) was not, initially, accepted by Vedic Āryans as a god worthy of worship in a sacrificial ceremony.

ii) But later they had to accept him as such a god. That must have been a new cultural development among Vedic Āryans and can have been due to the influence of the superior civilization of original Indians.

5. When, in the course of time, both, Vedic and non-Vedic faiths got mingled into one single religion of Epic Hindusim, Vedic gods like Indra lost their grandeure and Viṣṇu, Śiva and Mother goddess attained prominence.

6. Viṣṇu in Mahābhārata is the supreme administrator in the divine administration, but has to work under the restrictions of divine law while Śiva is the supreme authority who may follow such law or may ignore it, as he is not bound by any thing like that. Such evidences prove the emergence of Śaivism as a very important element of Epic Hinduism. The eternal superiority of Śaivism, as expressed by Somānanda in his Śivadṛṣṭi, has, thus, been a correct assertion. His mention regarding the continuance of the tradition of the monistic Śaivism, right from the hoary past, can be proved to be correct on the basis of some references from ancient literature as given below : : —

1. The Rudra hymns of the Yajurveda verify the development of sufficient popularity of the Rudra-Śiva cult among Vedic Āryans during the middle of Vedic period.

2. Śiva was accepted as the supreme authority in the whole existence by all Āryan and non-Āryan by the beginning of the age of Mahābhārata.

3. The Śaivite religio-philosophical views came to be considered as the supreme elements of Indian faith by the time of Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad.

4. The practice of Yoga attained high popularity among Vedic Āryans by the same period, though it had started to attain it even in the period of early Upaniṣads like Kaṭha, Chāndogya, etc.

5. Śāmbhavopāya, the highest type of the Trika Yoga of Śaiva monism, was expressed in detail in the sixth chapter of Bhagavadgītā.

6. The Mahābhārata episodes of Lord Śrī Krishṇa, who had received the secrets of Śaiva theism, first by Upamanyu and then by Durvāsās, prove the continuation of Trika Yoga throughout such long-long ages.

7. Some very essential elements of the Śāmbhavopāya of the Trika system of Śaiva monism can be found expressed in the Yatindharma portion of the third chapter of the Smṛti of Yājña-valkya.

8. Śaṅkarācārya, while commenting on Śvetāśvatara-Upaniṣad, quotes a lengthy dialogue between Yājñavalkya and Gārgī. It discusses several secret elements of Śāmbhavī-Mūdrā in sufficient detail, though the source of the quotation has not been mentioned there.

9. Kālidāsa describes such Śāmbhavī-Mudrā with a beautiful poetic style in the 3rd canto of his Kumāra-Sambhava.

10. The Śabda-Brahmanvāda principle, dealt with in the very beginning of the Vākyapadīya, proves that Bhartṛhari must have received initiation in some practice of Śaiva monism. His Śabda-Brahmanvāda cannot be understood, clearly, except through the help of some works on Kashmir Śaivism.

11. Avadhūtagītā refers to the Śāmbhava, Śākta and Āṇava Upāyas of Kashmir Śaivism, as well as to its several other terms such as :- Pada, Piṇḍa, etc.

12. Some argue that descriptions of Śāmbhavayoga can be found in some Vachanās of some Vīra-Śiva saints of Karṇāṭaka and also in a few sayings of some other saints like Kabir.

Such occasional clear descriptions of some typical Yoga practices of the Trika system of Kashmir Śaivism prove the fact that the practical aspect of this philosophy continued to be prevalent among long lines of preceptors and disciples in India right from the hoary past to the medieval ages. Ācārya Amṛta-vāgbhava, a Śaiva philosopher of the present age, received initiation in Śāmbhava-Yoga from sage Durvāsās, at his ancestral home at Vārāṇasi in 1919 A.D. He practised in it and his practice revealed to him the basic principles of monistic Śaivism through a direct intuitional revelation.

This much is the history of the basic origin of Kashmir Śaivism and its brief comparison with several prominent schools of Indian thought. Now let us come to the particular origin and the historical development of the subject :—

Kashmir Śaivism, as it is available to us, was, academically, developed by two traditions of Brāhmaṇa scholars, one of them consists of the indigenous Pandits of Kashmir, called Bhaṭṭas and the other one was of such Brāhmaṇa families, who having migrated to the valley round about the time of great Kārkoṭa rulers of Kashmir, had also become, practically, Kashmirians in all essential respects. Somānanda, Utpaladeva and Abhinavagupta belonged, basically, to such migrant families of scholars. Vāsugupta may also have belonged to such family of Atrigupta, the ancestor of Abhinavagupta. The same has been the case with Lakśmaṇagupta. But Yogins known, popularly, as Bhaṭṭas, belonged to some indigenous Brāhmaṇa families of Kashmir. Such Brāhmaṇas for instance are even now called Bhaṭṭas in the valley. Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa, Bhaṭṭa Pradyumna, Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, Bhaṭṭa Bhāskasa, Bhaṭṭa Bhūtirāja, Bhaṭṭendurāja, Bhaṭṭa Divākaravatsa and many other teachers under such family name, belonged to the indigenous Kashmirians. As has already been said, Saṅgamāditya, the sixteenth descendant of Tryambakāditya, settled in Kashmir about the eighth century A.D. The monistic school of Śaivism got, thus, transplanted from the Kailāsa region to the valley of Kashmir. It flourished well in the Valley and many great Yogins appeared among the descendants and the lines of the disciples of Saṅgamāditya. Atrigupta, an ancestor of Abhinavagupta, being a great scholar, was invited to Kashmir and got settled here with the patronage of king Lalitāditya. Utpaladeva refers to his father as a Lāṭa and that proves his family, to have originally, belonged to Gujarat. His ancestors may also have settled in Kashmir in the eighth century. Many scholars and saints known as Bhaṭ ṭas, the indigenous Brāhmaṇas of Kashmir, as well as House scholars, who appeared in these migrant families, joined the school of Tryambaka. Many Siddhas among them discovered many scriptures of Śaiva monism and became, consequently, known as Maṭṭhikaguravaḥ, the teachers of the school concerned. Such scriptures of monistic Śaivism have been counted as sixty four in Śrīkaṇṭha Saṁhitā, quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary on Tantrāloka of Abhinavagupta. Some Siddhas, having still finer efficiency, discovered another group of six scriptures, known as Saura Bhargaśikhā, etc. The have been accepted to be higher in merit even to the above mentioned sixty four. These six scriptures were classified into two groups of three each and one of such groups is well known under the name Trika. It has been, mystically, called Ṣaḍardha, the half of six, as well. Such Trika Āgamas are :— (i) Siddha Tantra, Mālinī Tantra and Vāmaka Tantra (mentioned at present as Nāmaka Tantra). These are the Śaiva scriptures of the highest standard. There were two groups of ten and eighteen Āgamas as well, and those adhered, respectively, to dualistic and monodualistic views. Such twenty eight Āgamas are well known in the South also, but the above mentioned sixty four and six Āgamas were well known to the Śaivas of Kashmir only; though Śaṅkarācārya refers in his Saundaryalaharī to some sixty four Tantras of Śiva as well. All such Śaiva Āgamas served as the sources of the philosophy and theological practices of Śaivism. The Śaivism of Kashmir has the closest relation with the Trika-Āgamas, though it draws from many other Āgamas as well. Tantras are the same as Āgamas. The word Āgama means the truth revealed, clearly, through intuitional realization. The same truth, proceeding far ahead, through long lines of the respective preceptors and disciples, was called Tantra, the word being derived from Tanu-Vistāre. Passages from these dualistic and monodualistic scriptures of Śaivism have also been quoted as authority in most of the important works on Kashmir Śaivism, especially, on the topics belonging to theology. There were, in fact, no hard and fast barriers, dividing the teachings of these 10+18+6 Śaiva scriptures, either, mutually, or from the three Trika-Āgamas. Many topics are common to all such scriptures and many view-points also are common to them. Such Āgamas are the source-books of Kashmir Śaivism.

Vasugupta, a very prominent sage, belonging to the line of Tryambaka, appeared in Kashmir some time about the beginning of the ninth century. Being a great Yogin of high merit, he was blessed to enjoy such a gracious attitude of Lord Śiva, which resulted in the revelation of a, highly, refined Śaiva scriptural work, composed in Śūtra-style and known as Śivasūtra. The account of such revelation, as given by Kṣemarāja, appears to be a story woven by devotees. As recorded by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara, some perfect being (Siddha) appeared before Vasugupta (in dream) and imparted the Sūtras of Śiva to him. Such an account appears to be a historical fact. He pondered on it through a meditative study and discovered in it the Spanda principle of Śaivism. In addition, he discovered the meditative method of realizing Spanda, the finer and blissful stir of pure consciousness, by means of a forceful excercise in activating one's strong will of power and not resorting to any contemplation, meditation, worship, etc. He imparted the Sūtra, as well as the method of discovering Spanda as one's basic essence, to his disciples and Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa among them composed Spandakārikā, discussing in it the philosophical and theological principles and doctrines, as expressed, mystically, in the first three chapters of the Śiva-Sūtra of Vasugupta. The fourth chapter of the Sūtra appears to have been, highly, esoteric in its content. Only a few of its Sūtras can be now found as having been quoted by Abhinavagupta and Kṣemarāja in works like Īśvarapratyabhijñā-Vivṛttivimarśinī and Spanda-Sandoha. Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa had composed a detailed commentary named Tattvārtha-cintāmaṇi on such fourth chapter of Śivasūtra. But that highly, valuable work has been lost. Just a few quotations from it are now available. Later authors have rather confused the Sūtras of that chapter with the commentary, as has been the case with Vākyapadīya of Bhartṛhari. It appears that Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa must have attained very high popularity and fame as a master of esoteric practices of the Yoga of the Trika system, because he is the, only, author of Śaivism, who has been mentioned as a Siddha by Kalhaṇa in his Rājataraṅgiṇī. Somānanda's name has also been mentioned in that work, but not in the context of the mention of scholars, but in that of a battle. There, he has been mentioned just as a builder of a Śiva shrine in which king Haraṣdeva took refuge for a day before being killed in the battle. Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa's brief commentary called Vṛtti on his Spandakārikā is also available, but all other works from his pen have now been lost. Utpala-Vaiṣṇava refers to his Tattvavicāra and Sva-Svabhāva-Sambodhana in his Spanda-Pradīpikā. Kṣemarāja is not correct in ascribing the authorship of Spandakārikā to Vasugupta. The evidences of Utpala-Vaiṣṇava, Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara and Rāmakaṇṭha, a younger contemporary of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa, in favour of his authorship of the Kārikā, have a far greater weight. The Kārikā is at present available with three detailed commentaries by :- (i) Rāmakaṇṭha, (ii) Utpala-Vaiṣṇava and (iii) Kṣemarāja, in addition to the paraphrase (Vṛtti) by the author himself. Kṣemarāja threw light on the significance of the Spanda principle in his Spanda-Sandoha. Śivasūtra was explained in detail by Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara through his Śivasūtra-Vārtika. He was the seventh degree successor in the line of the disciples of Vasugupta and his Vārtika presents the traditional interpretation of the Sūtras, coming down to him through an unbroken line of preceptors of high merit, one of whom was Bhaṭṭa Pradyumna, the author of Tattvagarbha-Stotra. He was an adherent of the Śakti aspect of the Absolute and was a cousin of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa. Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara is the, only, ancient author of Śaivism who gives a definite information about the fourth chapter of the Śivasūtra. His Vārtika on the Sūtra is available, but the academic importance of such work appears to have been, unduly, damaged by the Vimarśinī commentary on Sūtras, composed by Kṣemarāja, who appears as having been, unduly, prejudiced towards Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa and the whole line of his disciples. Such a tendency in him may not have been liked by his master, Abhinavagupta, who has, totally, ignored him, while mentioning the names of most of his worthy disciples in several works written by him. Kṣemarāja wrote a detailed commentary, known as Vimarśinī on, only, the first three chapters of Śivasūtra. He does not, at all, say anything about its fourth chapter. Besides, he does not take as much interest in explaining the real significance of the Sūtras, as he takes in making a show of his vast academic knowledge. He aims at impressing his readers by his sharp intelligence and vast knowledge of academic works of multifarious character. Kṣemarāja interprets the Sūtras of Śiva in his own way, which does not appear to be always correct, as he ignores the tradition as it came down from Vasugupta through an unbroken line of preceptors and disciples. His disciple Varadarāja, also wrote a Vārtika on Śivasūtra. The Vimarśinī commentary of Kṣemarāja can be understood by a reader, only, with the help of that Vārtika. One more short commentary on the Sūtras by some unknown writer has been published as footnotes beneath the pages of Śivasūtra-Vārtika of Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara. Śivasūtravṛtti, a brief paraphrase of the Sūtras, composed by some Pandit, appears to be a condenced gist of the views of Kṣemarāja, as expressed by him in his Vimarśinī. Utpala Vaiṣṇava appeared long before Kṣemaraja. He, having been impressed by the Spandakārikā, wrote a, scholarly, commentary on it under the title Pradīpikā and tried to prove that the Vaiṣṇava Āgamas of Pañcāratra school do also teach the same philosophy and theology as expressed by Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa in his Spandakārikā. This proves the popularity of the teachings of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa among the theologians of even the schools of Vaiṣṇavism. The commentary of Utpala-Vaiṣṇava provides several items of information on the historical aspect of Kashmir Śaivism. He solves the problem of the authorship of Spandakārika of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa in the most clear terms, giving information about some other works of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa and the contribution by Siddhanātha. His commentary on Spandakārikā is, thus, of great value. The most ancient commentary on the Kārikā is the breif Vṛtti, written by Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa himself and the next commentary is the Spanda-Vivṛtti by Rāmakaṇṭha, a younger contemporary of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa. He also gives clear suggestion in favour of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa's authorship of Spandakārikā. His commentary follows the Vṛtti, written by the author himself. Another commentary on Spandakārikā is the Spanda-Nirṇaya by Kṣemarāja. That commentary does not, strictly, follow the traditional interpretations. The commentator takes Vasugupta as the author of the Kārikā and ignores, in such respect, the evidence of Rāmakaṇṭha, who must have known Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa very well, as he was his junior contemporary, both having lived during the reign of king Avantivarman. The authorship of Spandakārikā had not emerged as a problem in the time of Abhinavagupta. Therefore, he did not pay himself any keen attention to it and in stead, accepted the general opinion, prevalent among, scholarly, circles. Such opinion was based on misunderstanding and wrong interpretation of the concluding verse of Spanda-Vṛtti. Kṣemarāja's Spanda-Sandoha provides a clear interpretation of the Spanda principle of Kashmir Śaivism. Kṣemarāja, says that Spanda-Kārikā carried many interpretations and commentaries, but only the above mentioned ones are now available. The term Spanda is found in Anuttaraprakāśa-Pañcāśikā of Ādinātha, a Siddha of an uncertain age. The most ancient mention of the term is, however, that which occurs in two verses of Paraśambhu-Mahimnastotra of sage Durvāsās, the ancient preceptor of Śaiva monism and the teacher of Tryambakāditya, who I mentioned, previously, as the originator of the tradition of the monistic Kashmir Śaivism. No other work of importance is now available on the Spanda section of Kashmir Śaivism. Works belonging to such section of Śaivism do not elaborate on the aspect of the theoretical principles of such philosophy. As for its practical aspect is concerned, that also has not been discussed, elaborately, in any work belonging to such Spanda section. Vague hints towards some special methods to realize Spanda as the wonderful essence of one's animation, have been given in most of such works.

The development of the philosophical principles of Kashmir Śaivism in a logical style starts with the Śivadṛṣṭi of Somānanda, the first elaborate treatise on Śaivism composed in accordance with the method prescribed by sage Gautam in his Nyāya-Sūtra. Many principles of the philosophy and the doctrines of practical theology laying hidden in the Śaiva Āgamas, were, skilfully, drawn by Somānanda and were then expressed, logically, by him in his Śivadṛṣṭi. This first important work on the philosophy of Kashmir Śaivism does not, only, discuss the philosophy of Śaiva monism, but, clarifying the fundamental principles of all the schools of thought, prevalent in India in the ninth century, puts them to logical and psychological tests for the purpose of finding out their merits, demerits, loopholes, inaccuracies and comparative importance. A great number of couplets has been devoted to the presentation and subsequent refutation of the atheistic teachings, presented by the authors of Vijñānavāda. Such subtle logical discussions refer, precisely, to the arguments put forth by Dharmakīrti in his Pramāṇa-Vārtika. A deep study of that work on Buddhist logic is, therefore, an essential necessity, if a scholar wants to understand the essence of that portion of Śivadṛṣṭi. No scholar has so far undertaken the trouble to accomplish such difficult task, for want of which a lengthy protion of the sixth chapter of Śivadṛṣṭi remains still more or less unintelligible. The same is the case with many couplets in the seventh chapter, dealing with some esoteric Yogic practices, discussed vaguely. Utpaladeva, the successor of Somānanda, as the master of the school of Tryambaka, had written a brief commentary on the couplets of Śivadṛṣṭi. Such commentary is available in print, only, up to the middle of its fourth chapter. Since the remaining part of such commentary has not become available anywhere, nearly, the second half of the work remains unintelligible at many places. Abhinavagupta had written on it a detailed commentary named Śivadṛṣṭyālocana. That commentary has not been found anywhere in the present age. The loss of such commentaries has stood in the way of Śivadṛṣṭi in gaining its deserved popularity with scholars of Indian philosophy. Somānanda had written a commentary on Parātrīśikā (wrongly, known at present as Parā-Triṁśikā), which also has been lost.

The most popular philosophical work on Kashmir Śaivism is Īśvarapratyabhijñā of Utpaladeva, the chief disciple of Somānanda. While the Śivadṛṣṭi runs, roughly, like the Ganges in the Himalayan valleys, Īśvarapratyabhijñā flows, smoothly, like the same river in the plains of India. Utpaladeva supplimented his Īśvarapratyabhijñā with three small works, one of them dealing with the topic of relativity (Sambandhasiddhi) and the two other ones devoted to the refutations of the Buddhist non-existencialism (Ajaḍapramātṛ-Siddhi) and the atheism of Sāṁkhya philosophy (Īśvara-siddhi). These smaller works, bound together, are known as Siddhi-Trayī. The author had written brief paraphrase of the couplets of these three works, but it has, partly, been lost, with the result that Siddhitrayī also has not so far become, fully, intelligible. Abhinavagupta had written three Vimarśinīs on these three small works of Utpaladeva, but those also have been lost. Utpaladeva was a poet of great merit and his devotional poems, collected by his disciples under the title Śivastotrāvali and explained later by Kṣemarāja, are still sung, popularly, by the devotees of Śiva in Kashmir. Quotations from some other works of Utpaladeva are available in the commentary named Vimarśinī on Īsvarapratyabhijñā, written by Abhinavagupta; but even the names of such works are not known now to any one. Such works have, unfortunately, been lost. Īśvarapratyabhijñā of Utpaladeva enjoys the same position in the philosophy of Kashmir Śaivism, as Brahmasūtra enjoys in Advaita-Vedānta. Utpaladeva had composed a, scholarly commentary, named Vivṛtti or Ṭīkā on his own Vṛtti on Īśvarapratyabhijñā. But, unfortunately, such Vivṛtti has also been lost. Abhinavagupta composed a lengthy commentary named Vimarśinī on that Vivṛtti as well. It has been published in three big volumes under the title Īśvarapratyabhijñā-Vivṛtti-Vimarśinī, but for want of the original Vivṛti, it does not prove to be of that advantage, which would have become possible, provided the Vivṛtti were also available.

Lakṣmaṇagupta was the successor of Utpaladeva, as the master of the school of Tryambaka. No work from his pen has so far become available, though his views on a point in Sādhanā have been mentioned in Tantrāloka.

Kashmir Śaivism reached the climax in the development of its both the aspects of theory and practice through the works written by Abhinavagupta, a descendent in the family of Atrigupta, and the chief disciple and successor of Lakṣmaṇagupta, as the master of the school of Tryambaka and also a grand disciple of Utpaladeva. As suggested by him in one of the concluding verses in Īśvarapratyabhijñā-Vivṛttivimarśinī, Utpaladeva was living when Abhinavagupta was yet a child and could not be initiated by the master himself. Lakṣmaṇagupta was, consequently, instructed by him to initiate him in the path of Śaiva monism. : —

"Śrī-śāstrakṛd-ghaṭita-Lakṣmaṇagupta-pāda-satyopadasrśita-śivādvaya-vāda-dṛptaḥ." (I.P.V.V. Vol-III p. 406) Utpaladeva did, thus, recognize in the child Abhinava some such great Siddha of high calibre, who could carry the academic development of Kashmir Śaivism to its climax. The most important work on the philosophical theory of Kashmir Śaivism is the Vimarśinī (Commentary) written by Abhinavagupta on the Īśvarapratyabhijñā of Utpaladeva. It has the same position in Kashmir Śaivism, as the *Śāṅkarabhāṣ*ya on Brahmasūtra has in Advaita Vedānta. Abhinavagupta's Vimarśinī on the Vivṛtti written by Utpaladeva himself, on his Īśvarapratyabhijñā, though of a still higher standard, is handicapped on account of the non-availability of the Vivṛtti, as noted above.

Abhinavagupta's other work of unique importance and immense value is his Tantrāloka, which throws a, wonderfully, brilliant light on the secrets of the Śaiva theology of the Trika system. It deals at length with the fundamentals of the philosophy and the practical Sādhanā of Kashmir Śaivism. The theological practices of the Trika system of Śaivism have been discussed, philosophically, in that work. Not only the Trika-yoga of different standards, but also the Tāntric rituals of the system, have been discussed in it, though certain items like Mantras, Mudrās, Maṇḍalas, Yantras, etc. have not been, fully, clarified, because such items of Tāntrism could have been misused by some unworthy practitioners in this age of Kaliyuga. Light has been thrown on such topics in such a way that an aspirant, having already obtained proper initiation in the Tāntric path of Sādhanā, can, surely, get the proper guidance but a scholar having neither any interest in actual practice, nor the proper calibre to undertake it, can not grasp their real essence. Such has been the policy of most of the Śaivite and Vaiṣṇavite masters of Tāntric Sādhanā, but some Buddhist monks have ignored such dicipline, while developing and discussing the practical aspect of Vajrayāna.

Abhinavagupta was, highly, interested in the practice of the Kaulasādhanā, started by Matsyendranātha (Macchanda) in Kāmarūpa. In fact, the practical path of Kaulism is very quick in yielding, both, the results known as Bhukti or enjoyment and Mukti or liberation, simultaneously. It was on such account that the ancient masters of Kashmir Śaivism used to practise the Kaula Sādhanā as well. Quoted passages from a commentary on Parātrīśikā by Somānanda prove him to have been practising Kaulism. Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa's description of a Dūti, (Female assistant of a Kaula teacher), quoted in Tantrāloka, shows his keen interest in Kaula practice. The same can be inferred with regard to Utpaladeva, who has been praised as tasting the results of liberation, even while indulging in activities that cause bondage. It is on account of such merits of Kaulism that Abhinavagupta devotes one full chapter to it in his Tantrāloka. Some more light shall be thrown on Kaulism in some pages ahead. Tantrasāra of Abhinavagupta is just a gist of his Tantrāloka.

Another work of very great importance by Abhinavagupta is his commentary named Vivaraṇa on Parātrīśikā, a Tāntric scriptural work on the finer practice of Śaivite Sādhanā. It is, erroneously, known at present as Parātriṁśikā. Such point has been clarified in the Vivaraṇa, but scholars, editors, publishers and research students do not care at all to follow such clarification made by the master himself. The fourth work of, highly, great importance from his pen is Mālinī-Vijayavārtika. It deals in a lucid style with the principles and doctrines of the theory of monistic Śaivism of Kashmir, as well as with those of its practical aspect, lying scattered in the voluminous Mālinītantra. Only the second part of that Tantra is available at present, under the title Mālinī-Vijayottara. The essense of the remaining part of that Tantra can now be seen in this Vārtika mentioned above. Abhinavagupta wrote some smaller works that could serve as text books. Bodha-Pañcadaśikā and Paramārthasāra are the important ones among such works. He was a master of most of the fine arts, on literary criticism and dramaturgy. His Abhinavabhāratī, a detailed commentary on Nāṭya-Śāstra of Bharata, is a unique work on the subject. His commentary on Dhvanyāloka of Ānanda-Vardhana is also being studied, popularly. A gist of his Tantrasāra was written by some Abhinavagupta-Viśeṣa,under the title Tantra-Vaṭadhānikā. Most probably, that is a work by his cousin, bearing the same name. He has been mentioned, along with some other cousins of the master, in the last chapter of Tantrāloka. Many works by Abhinavagupta have been lost. Quotations from them are available in his several works mentioned above. He was also a poet of high merit and his religio-philosophical lyrics are sung, popularly, even now, though many of such works have been lost.

Śivānandanātha, a, highly, prominent master of practical Śaivism, appeared at some Uttarapīṭha, most probably, situated in Kashmir, in the eighth century. He discovered an easier type of Śāktopāya, known as Kramanaya, or Kālīnaya. He imparted it to many disciples, the most important among whom were three female aspirants named Keyūravatī, Madanikā and Kalyāṇikā. Keyūravatī taught it to Govindarāja and he imparted it to Somānanda, from whom it reached, through a chain of practitioners, to Jayaratha in the 12th century. The chief disciple of Madanikā was Bhānuka. His teachings were, duly, received by Abhinavagupta through a chain of practitioners named Ujjaṭa, Udbhaṭa and others. This Udbhaṭa should not be confused with Bhattodbhaṭa, a court Pandit of Jayāpīḍa of 800 A.D. Kalyāṇikā imparted such method of Śāktopāya to Erakanātha, who did not transmit it to any line of disciples. A good number of works, under the name Krama, was written by its masters by the 12th century. Being easier in practice and quick in results, it became very popular with most of the Śaiva practitioners in Kashmir, so much so that teachers like Jayaratha mentioned it as an independent system of practical Śaivism and counted it as such along with Trika and Kula systems. But the scriptural passages, counting the main systems of spiritual practice, as quoted by, both, Abhinavagupta (in his commentary on Parātrīśikā) and Jayaratha in his Viveka on Tantrāloka, do not at all mention any system of practice under the name Krama. The systems mentioned there are, Veda, Śaiva, Vāma, Dakṣiṇa, Kula (or Kaula), Mata and Trika." Abhinavagupta devotes one full chapter to Kaula system, but does not do so with respect to Krama, which has been depicted just as a, highly, important variety of Śāktopāya in, both, his works named Tantrāloka and Tantrasāra. Some pioneer research scholars, who brought Kashmir Śaivism to light, by writing on it in English, committed such mistake in announcing Krama as an independent system of practical Śaivism and no scholar did so far care to correct such mistake, which has, by now, become a mountain of a mole. The preceptor of the writer of these lines, who, having been initiated in Śaiva monism by sage Durvāsas, did also take such Krama-Yoga as just an important variety of Śāktopāya and did not find anything in it, which would be taken as something different from the elements of Śāktopāya of the Trika system.

* The writer of these lines has got a vague information that the only existant manuscript of such Vivṛtti is now included in the collection of manuscripts made by Mrs. Kapilā Vātsyāyan in Kashmir in the last eightees at Śrinagar for some manuscript library established at Delhi.

Some writers of secondary importance appeared in Kashmir after Abhinavagupta. Most of his direct disciples, taking greater interest in tasting the sweet experiences of the correct and divine nature of the self, illuminated to them by the practice of Trika-Yoga, did not care to devote themselves to book-writing. Kṣemarāja was the only disciple of the great master, who wanted to become famous as an author of high merit. Many of his works are available even now. His Parā-Prāveśikā is still being used as a primary text-book of Śaivism. His Pratyabhijñā-hṛdayaṃ, meant also for the same purpose, does often create confusion, as it confuses theory with practice, just to make the superior intelligence of the author felt by scholars. Such confusion is being created by his Vimarśinī on Śivasūtra as well. He wrote commentaries on some scriptural works like; Svachanda-Tantra and Netratantra as well, as on some Stotra works like; Stavacintāmaṇi of Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, Śivastotrāvali of Utpaladeva and Sāmba-Pañcāśikā by some one Sāmba. The most important of one among such later writers is Jayaratha, whose service to Kashmir Śaivism is, really, of great value. He, relying on some brief notes written on Tantrāloka by some Subhaṭadatta, composed a voluminous commentary on that important work on Śaivism. His commentary is, at present, the only guide in the study of Tantrāloka. Besides, Jayaratha quotes profusely from many Tāntric scriptures, which have been now lost. His commentary on Tantrāloka is thus a store-house of information regarding many points on the historical study of Śaivism. Sivopādhyāya is one of the last ancient authors writing on Śaivism. His commentary on Vijñānabhairava, a Tāntric text, is of great importance. His Śrividyā, written on the basis of Tripurā-Tāpanī Upaniṣad, remains unpublished so far. He wrote some other works like, Gāyatrī-Nirṇaya; Śiva-Rātri-Nirṇaya, etc. as well. Lalleśvarī, a Yoginī of the fourteenth century, gave two new turns to the tradition of Kashmir Śaivism. Since that system of philosophy did not recognize any caste, creed sex, etc. with respect to eligibility for initiation, she initiated some Muslim Sūfis in Śaiva-Yoga and that resulted in the growth of an order of, apparently, half-mad saints, known in Kashmir as Ṛṣis, coming from, both, Hindu and Muslim families. The second new turn given by her was to write in the spoken language of the people. Her philosophical sayings in poetic prose, known as Vāks, became very popular in the Valley. Such poetic prose in Kashmiri language is now being collected and published by State Academy of Art and Culture. But the present political situation in Kashmir is in such a grip of militancy that it is difficult to say as to what would be the future of such philosophical traditions in the valley, ridden very, badly, by a rabid and fanatic fundamentalism.

Ancient masters of Kashmir Śaivism were, mostly, very good poets, as well, and they composed religio-philosophical poetry in Sanskrit. Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, the author of the poem Stavacintāmaṇi, has been called as an ancient teacher (Pūrvaguru) by Abhinavagupta and his verses have been quoted by him as an authority on Kashmir Śaivism. Utpaladeva was also a poet of great merit, and his poetry, prevalent under the title Śivastotrāvali, is still popular with Hindus of Kashmir. Abhinavagupta also wrote many Stotras, the most prominent one among which is Bhairavastotra. It is, popularly sung even now by the Kashmiri Brāhmaṇas in and outside the Valley. One of his very sweet Stotras was named Śiva-Śaktyavinābhāva-Stotra, but only two of its, highly, beautiful verses are now available as quotations in his commentary on Bhagavadgītā. His other available Stotras are listed below :—

(1) Anuttarāṣṭīkā depicts the character of the transcedental reality. (2) Dehasthadevatā-Cakra-Stotra throws light on the essence of the Yoga as conducted in accordance with the practice in Śāktopāya. (3) His Kramastotra explains, mystically, the essence of Kālīnaya. (4) Quotations from several unknown Stotras from his pen are available in his philosophical works. Bhaṭṭa Pradyumna, being a Śākta poet, composed Tattvagarbha-stotra. Devotional poems by some other poet-philosophers are also available and such tradition was alive upto the present destruction of Kashmirian culture under the rule of the so-called secular democrat leaders of India, trying to maintain a show of socialistic pattern of society and ignoring, for such purpose, the rich religio-philosophical and cultural heritage of the nation. Such philosopher-poets appeared throughout the lengths and breadths of India and some of their poems are of great interest for people devoted to Śaiva monism; for instance. :—

1. Para-Śambhu-Mahimastotra by sage Durvāsās.

2. Tripurā-Mahimastotra by sage Durvāsās.

3. Lalitā-Śtava-Ratnaṃ by sage Durvāsas.

(These three hymns are known at present, only, to just a few scholars.)

4. Pañcastavī, a collection of five hymns to the Mother goddess, written by Dharmācārya of Kerala country, has remained, highly, popular with the Pandits of Kashmir.

5. Sāmba-Pañcāśikā, written by some poet devoted to Śaivism, by the name of Sāmba, a Son of Lord Kṛṣṇa, is also, popularly, sung by Kashmirian Śaivas.

6. Bhāvopahāra by Cakrapāṇi-Nātha has also remained popular with the Śaivas of Kashmir.

7. Cidgagana-candrikā is a, highly, beautiful long poem, extolling the divine power of the absolute Lord in a charming poetic style. Unfortunately, it has not yet been edited, properly, by any expert in Śaivism. Its first edition, edited by Trivikrama-Tīrtha, under the patronage of Sir Arthur Avalon, being the very first attempt, is full of defects. It is still more unfortunate that the second edition, prepared for the press at the Sanskrit University, Vārāṇasi, has not, only, inherited such defects, but has added to them through wrong interpretations.

8. Kramastotra by Siddhanātha (Śaṃbhunātha of Jālandhara Pīṭha) has been quoted as an authority on the Śāktopāya of the Trika system, especially, in the matters about Kālīnaya, mentioned above as Kramanaya. It has been quoted like that by some authors of Śāktism like Maheśvrānanda and some other authors in the Nātha tradition. Unfortunately, the Stotra has been lost and only fourteen of its verses are now available, as these have been quoted by Jayaratha, while commenting upon that position of Tantrāloka, which is meant to discuss the Śaktopāya of the Trika system of Śaivite Sādhanā. Abhinavagupta also composed one more Kramastotra, which has been published as an appendix to the thesis by Dr. K.C. Pandeya.

9. The famous Saundaryalaharī of Śaṅkarācārya is also popular with the Śaivas of Kashmir. Its study proves the fact that the great master of the philosophy of Advaitavedānta was in fact an Āgamic Śaiva, as far as his practical Sādhanā is concerned.

There is very little difference between Śaivism and Śāktism. The philosophical principles of, both, the traditions are identical. The Śaivas devoted their talent to the development of the philosophy of monistic Tantras, while the Śāktas, accepting the principles of such philosophy, used a terminology of a different type, derived out of some Tāntric works, devoted to the practical aspect of such monistic philosophy. Besides, they took greater interest in throwing light on the practical theology, especially, the ritual aspect of Tāntric Sādhanā. In addition, they showed a greater interest in and devotion for the Śākta aspect of the Absolute. Bhaṭṭa Pradyumna is one of such ancient Śāktas and a few verses of his Tattvagarbha-Stotra are available as quotations in some philosophical works like Spanda-Vivṛtti of Rāmakaṇṭha and also in the Śivadṛṣṭivṛtti of his master, Utpaladeva. The above mentioned works like Kramastotra, Śivaśaktyavinabhāva-Stotra etc. are taken as works on Śāktism.

The Nātha sect of such Śāktas also flourished well in Kashmir, as well as in some other parts of India. Puṇyānandanātha's Kāmakalā-Vilāsa is still popular with the Śāktas all over the country and so is the commentary on it by Amṛtānandanātha. Several other Nātha authors also wrote some important works, dealing with the theology of Śaivism. To which area of India did such Nātha's belong, is still an unsolved problem. The most important one among them is Maheśvarānanda, alias Gorakṣanātha of the Cola country in the South. Being a typical Kaula, he wrote Mahārtha-Mañjarī on Śaivism in Mahārāṣṭra-Apabhraṁśa and expressed it in a Śākta style. He follows the method of Abhinavagupta in his commentary, named Parimala, on his above mentioned work. Such Parimala is the, only, important work on monistic Śaivism, composed in the past by a non-Kashmirian author and has served as the only popular source of sufficient information, regarding the character of the theory and the practice of Śaiva monism, spread outside the valley of Kashmir during the past one thousand years. Just a little information about the subject was given to the scholars in the south by Varadarāja of Tamilnādu through his Śivasūtra-vārtika. Madhurāja, the father of Varadarāja, stayed in the school of Abhinavagupta for years and gave a description of the master and his school through his small Praśasti, known as Gurunāthaparāmarśa. Jayaratha wrote Vāmakeśvarī-Mata-Vivaraṇam, dealing with the practical aspect of Vāmaka-Tantra and Śirikaṇṭha (13th century) wrote Mahānaya-Prakāśa on the same subject in the Kashmirian Apabhraṁśa language of his time. Some quotations in more ancient Kashmirian language of the people are found in Parātrīśikā-Vivaraṇa and Tantrasāra of Abhinavagupta. Such language may have been a later (Apabhraṁśa) form of the ancient Paiśāci Prākṛta. Some of such quotations may, possibly, have been the sayings of Madaṇikā, a disciple of Śivānanda-Nātha, as the female teachers preferred to speak and write in the language of the common people, instead of Sanskrit.

Kashmir Śaivism is, basically, a philosophy revealed to Siddhas. It is, thus, a Saiddha-Darśana. There have been many such Siddhas in other parts of India as well. They also preached the same truth, though through a different method and with the help of different terminologies. For instance, most of the Śākta Siddhas called the ultimate truth as Parā-Saṁvit and mentioned its divine power as its Kalā, the divine art of Godhead, as taught by the masters of Kashmir Śaivism.

But, in fact, they also meant to teach the same truth as taught by the masters of Kashmir Śaivism. The main difference lies in the fact that their teachings did not develop in a logical method and did not attain the position of a full-fledged school of philosophy, as did the teachings of the school of Tryambaka. Even the Ārdha-Tryambaka School at Jalandharapīṭha did not attain academic development. At present, we have just the fourteen verses of Kramastotra of Siddhanātha alias Śambhunātha, quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary on the Śāktopāya chapter of Tantrāloka, out of the writings of the master of that centre of Śaivism. In addition, we have just two very beautiful Stotras by some Śaiva Nāgārjuna, who may have, most probably, appeared in the line of Śambhunātha. Such two hymns are :— (1) Citha-santoṣa-triṁśikā and Paramārcana-ṭriṁśikā (both published with notes by Shri Ranbir Kendriya Sanskrit Vidyapeetha, Jammu). There are, however, some other works of Siddhas, which agree in essential matters with Kashmir Śaivism with respect to philosophical principles and practical doctrines. Two of such important works are :— Mātṛkā-cakra-Viveka of Svatantrānandanātha and Virupākṣapañṣcāśikā of Virupākṣanātha. Yoginīhṛdayadīpikā and Varivasyā-Rahasya also can be counted among such works on superior philosophy. All such works, including those by the ancient masters of Śaivism, can be classified as Saiddha-Darśana, the philosophical revelations of Siddhas.

Lord Durvāsas, having been moved by compassion towards a young devotee of the mother-goddess Tripurā, appeared before him in a vision and imparted to him the correct and the perfect method of the highest variety of the Trika-Yoga of Śaiva monism. As the result of regular practice in such Yoga, known as Śāmbhava, the concerned young man, named Vaidyanātha Varkale, had an intuitional revelation of the main principles of Śaiva monism. Accordingly, he composed a hymn entitled Parama-Śiva-Stotra.

Afterwards, when he studied some ancient works on Śaivism under the advice of M.M. Shri Gopināth Kavirāj, he found that such works agreed with his own revelations of the truth. After a few years, he left his home and hearth and started roaming about the sacred places as a wandering Sādhu and visited Kashmir. He had several divine visions in the Valley. When he studied at Srinagar some works by the ancient masters of Kashmir Śaivism, his happiness knew no bounds, as he found the same truth taught in such works by the great ancient Siddhas, as he had already discovered as a result of his practice in Śāmbhava-Yoga. He wrote several works on his Darśana under the pen name "Amṛtavāgbhavācārya". The most important texts among such works are :— (1) Ātmavilāsa with Sundarī commentary, (2) Viṁśatikā-Śāstraṁ, (3) Siddha-Mahā-rahasyaṃ, (4) Mahānubhava-Śakti-Stava and (5) Mandākrāntā-Stotraṃ. Having felt that the propagation of mere spiritualism can never lead a nation to all round prosperity and progress, he, laying stress on national politics, composed a work known as Rāṣṭrāloka. Such work was later explained by him through a, philosophically, wṛitten huge commentary, named Rāṣṭra-sañjīvana-bhāṣya. That commentary is being published at Jaipur. The Ācārya laid stress on the fact that spiritual progress cannot be, generally, obtained so far as the worldly problems are not solved amicably and saw such negligence on the part of some important ancient teachers of India as one of the main causes of the present day miseries and problems of Indian nation. Having a great dislike for the present day democratic administration, run under the supreme authority of unscrupulously, corrupt, selfish, greedy and inefficient political leaders, he was in favour of a total change in the very constitution of India. He wanted the highest importance to be given to an honest, efficient and disciplined administration. Besides, he wanted the supreme power in the country to lie in the hands of selfless, disciplined, honest and efficient patriotic workers, eager for the right service of the nation. The disciples of the Ācārya had started to call his all round philosophy, giving due consideration to, both, Vyavahāra and Paramārtha, as the Neo-Śaivism or Abhinava-Śaiva-Darśana. Svātantrya-Darpaṇa, a fresh work on Neo-Śaivism, by the writer of these lines, has, recently, been published in Sanskrit and English editions. Scholars in Kashmir had kept alive the tradition of writing notes, commentaries, hymns, etc. in Śaivism upto the present age. Lord Śiva alone knows what would happen to it in the near future.

With regard to basic philosophical problems about life, its origins, aim, etc. and also about the phenomenal existence, the Śaivism of Kashmir finds loopholes in most of the schools of Indian thought. So far as the atomic theory of Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika is concerned, it points out in it some logical defects in the theory of the combination of atoms for the purpose of the creation of molecules binaries, etc. Beacuse, such combinations are possible on, only, one side of the atoms concerned, and that disproves the partlessness of atoms. A grouping together of atoms, as maintained by Vaiśeṣikas, does also disprove their partlessness and sidelessness. Besides, the Śaiva philosophers are eager to find out the origin of atoms as well. Īśvara, creating the universe in accordance with the divine law of causation and under the consideration of the past actions of beings, is reduced to utter dependence, which disproves his Almightiness. The state of the Apavarga position of a being is, in accordance with the Āgamic revelation and logical understanding, the position of a being in the state of Suṣupti, the dreamless sleep, and beings lying in such a state of animation are counted as a class of bonded beings, known in Śaivism as Pralayākalas. Light on such topic is going to be thrown ahead. Such state in dreamless sleep can not be taken as a state of pure revelation of the, exactly, real nature of the self and has not been accepted in Śaivism as the real liberation. It is just a temporary cessation of the cycles of births and deaths.

The Sāṁkhya theory of spontaneous transformation of the unconscious root-substance can not be accepted as a satisfactory explanation of the creation of the phenomenal existence. Such substance can, no doubt, undergo transformation favourable to bonded beings; but being, totally, unconscious (and ignorant), it can not take into consideration any particular aims and objects of such individual beings, having, multifariously, different types of psychological tendencies and efficiencies, as well as different types of past actions. Unconscious elements like winds, clouds, rains, rivers, oceans, etc. have their spontaneous movements, but these are not aimed at any particularly definite types of the objectives of any individual beings. The, wonderfully, complex types of the transformations of the unconscious root-substance, aimed at different objectives of multifarious variety, do suggest the guidance from some omniscient and conscious authority, which has not been discovered and accepted in the Sāṁkhya system. Besides, how can the root substance, which is, totally, unconscious in its nature, see as to which of the beings have developed the discriminatory knowledge in their intellect and which of them have not been able to do it? Therefore, it can not take a decision to leave alone any being with such discriminatory knowledge.

No unconscious element can discriminate a being having right knowledge, from others, who do not have it. Therefore, Prakṛti shall not leave alone any being and, thus, the Kaivalya type of liberation can not occur at all, with respect to any person. Then the position in the state of Kaivalya is also a variety of dreamless sleep and beings lying in it can not rise above the position of Pralayākalas. These are the main loopholes in the Sāṁkhya-yoga theory of transformation as pointed out by Śaivas.

As for the Buddhist principle of the non-existencialism, it also cannot satisfy the curiosity of an intelligent and wise thinker. Human psychology proves that only such a being can have the recollection of a particular object or action, who has, actually, had its experience. Events experienced by 'A' cannot be recollected by 'B'. Any transmission of the impression of experiences among different knowing entities, is not at all possible. Such impressions of 'A' can not become transmitted into 'B'. Therefore, the principle of the non-existence of the Ātman as the recollector and that of the existence of the chains of different conscious minds, undergoing births and deaths and ending, finally, in total extinction, as taught by the Buddhist philosophers, cannot satisfy a curious seeker of truth. Besides, the position of Nirvāṇa comes, virtually, out to be an absolute type of dreamless sleep and beings in such sleep have been counted in Śaivism among Pralayākalas in Śaivism .

The position of Brahma-Nirvāṇa, as taught in Advaitavedānta, is also a finer type of Suṣupti, having just a peep into Turyā, which enables such Vedāntins to see the self as Sat, Cit and Ānanda. Teachers, like Gauḍapāda and Śaṅkara were, in fact, Āgamic practitioners of Śrīvidyā and were, highly, devoted to, Mother-goddess of Tāntrism. They taught the monistic and theistic absolutism to their worthy disciples and discussed the current logical aspect of their philosohpy just for the sake of debates with the protogonists of the Buddhist non-existencialism. The tragedy of it was the fact that the propagators of that philosophy, right from Vācaspatimiśra to Śrīharṣa, laid all emphasis on its dry logical aspect and ignored the practical one. Advaita Vedānta became, usually, a philosophy meant for discussions, debates and competitions in earning royal patronage at the courts of Indian princes and rulers. Even the trustees of the Maṭhas of Vedānta cared very little about the propagation of its theological practice and took, instead, an earnest care in the financial position of their monasteries and their popularity in royal courts. Such Vedāntins can, in the view of Śaivism, attain the position of a class of semi-bonded beings, called as Vijñānākalas, whose character is going to be discussed just ahead. Bhāskararāya, alias Bhāsurānanda-Nātha, of the Tamil land has been one of the very few followers and practitioners of the real Vedānta, as taught in Upaniṣads and also as propagated by Siddhās with the help of Śaiva Āgamas. Vedāntins in Kashmir were, mostly, the Vaiṣṇavite philosophers, devoted to the Pāñcarātra system. The tradition of the Advaita Vedānta of Śaṅkara did not at all get itself established in Kashmir before the rule of the Dogra monarchs (19th century). The present Śaṅkarācārya temple at Śrinagar was given such name in the time of Mahārāja Pratāpsingh, when the present Linga was installed in the ancient temple, which had remained empty for centuries after the reign of Sikandar Butshikan. The stone temple concerned was, originally, built by an ancient ruler named Gopāditya and the Linga installed in it by him was called Jyeṣṭharudra, the hill having been known as Gopādri. Muslims from the time of Sikandar (15th century) started to call the temple as Takhte-Sulemān. An ancient bilingual grave-inscription, mentioning the temple concerned under such two names (Jyeṣṭharudra and Takhte-Sulemān) is still available at Srinagar. All details of the Kashmir tour by Śaṅkarācārya, as given in a 14th century work, entitled Śaṅkaradigvijaya of Mādhava, are based on mere poetic imagination. This thing can be proved by a comparison of that work with a 10th century work, known as Śaṅkaravijaya by Anantānandagiri. No trace of either the system of Sannyāsins or the tradition of the Vivartavāda of Advaita-Vedānta, was seen in the valley before the Dogra rule.

All the above mentioned schools of Indian philosophy take the supposed beginningless and causeless ignorance as the basic cause of the bondage of, worldly, beings and loopholes in such principle have already been discussed. Pāñcarātras and later Vaiṣṇavas, as well as the Śaivās of the south, have carried their philosophy to a position closer to mythology. Their sālokya (residence in the abode of God), Sāmīpya (His close vicinity) and Sāyujya (partial identity with Him) have not been accepted in Kashmir Śaivism as the positions of beings in the highest type of liberation and they have not, therefore, been recommended for aspirants following Śaiva monism. Such positions can, at the most, be taken as superior types of, heavenly, life, but not liberation from all bondage. Sufficiently, similar is the case with some positions occupied by Tīrthānkaras in the uppermost regions of space, known in Jainism as Alokākāśa and Siddhaśīlā, as advocated by the masters of that philosophy.

Kashmir Śaivism establishes a, highly, theistic absolutism as its fundamental metaphysical principle. It is a monistic philosophy establishing the fact that there is, only one eternally, existent reality and that is the infinite, eternal and pure consciousness, shining as the infinite 'I' or self which may not be confused with ego. It is consciousness alone and nothing else. Such infinite consciousness lies beyond the scope of all interior and exterior means of knowing, including all senses and the whole mental apparatus. Being beyond the scope of knowing, it is taken as an absolute reality, satisfying all the particulars of absolutism. Epistemologically, it is beyond the scope and reach of all Pramāṇas or proofs known to logicians. It is, in fact, its own proof, as it shines with a brilliant psychic lustre in the practice of Śāmbhavī-Mudrā of the Trika Yoga of Kashmir Śaivism. Even when all the organs, senses and the whole mental apparatus are lost in suṣupti, an individual being continues to shine by the virtue of the light of his pure consciousness. As soon as a Śivayogin transcends the state of Suṣupti and finds himself established in Turyā, the state of spontaneous self-revelation, his finite individuality becomes one with the infinite and absolutely, pure I-consciousness and he attains, thus, a direct revelation of his real self, consisted of only the infinite and pure I-consciousness, lying beyond the scope of mind and all mental activities. The whole mental apparatus, as well as the finite ego, are, both, lost, for the time being, into the infinite and absolute I-consciousness and an aspirant feels, actually, to be one with the pure and infinite consciousness. This is the principle of absolutism as discovered and propagated by the ancient Śaiva philosophers of Kashmir.

So far as the manifestation of the phenomenal existence of all physical and mental entities of multifarious variety is concerned, the practitioners of Sāmbhavī-Yoga-Mudrā did not see it as any thing brought about by any element like the beginningless and inexplicable basic ignorance, but discovered it as the outward manifestation of the theistic powers of the infinite and pure I-consciousness. The question can arise here, as to why should such pure consciousness manifest such a phenomenal existence, which is full of misery. Such question arose in an ancient time in the mind of Gautam Buddha, who did not, therefore, accept the world as a creation by God, but as a result of the past impressions of the, constantly, flowing currents of individual minds. Advaita-Vedāntins discovered the monistic metaphysical reality as infinite and, absolutely, tranquil pure consciousness alone, but the Śaivas of Kashmir saw the blissful self-awareness as the essential character of such pure consciousness, with the result that it is aware of itself and its divine potency. Such awareness of the absolute self, with regard to its character of divine essence, takes the form of an outward vibration of the inward blissfulness and such vibratory nature of the absolute reality, called as Spanda, makes the absolute pure consciousness ever active towards the outward projection of its divine powers, resulting in the manifestation of divine activities of phenomenal creation, preservation, absorption, etc. happenning in the manner of reflections. The phenomenal existence is, thus, due to the outward reflection of the divine powers of the pure and monistic absolute consciousness, which, being playful on account, of its nature of blissfulness, plays the divine drama of phenomenal creation etc. This is the main difference between the Vedāntic and Śaivite views regarding the ontological and cosmogonical views of their philosophy.

Thus, the Śaiva-Yogins of Kashmir saw the infinite and pure consciousness as being, limitlessly, blissful in nature and discovered it as the one complete whole of all divine powers. They saw such consciousness as ever playful on account of its nature of blissfulness, working out a vibratory activity termed as Spandas, with the result that it is always manifesting, outwardly, the reflections of its divine powers. Why does a poet create his wonderful poetic world? Experiencing a forceful charge of his vibratory poetic talent, he becomes active in creating, outwardly, his poetic world, lying, inwardly, in him in the form of the powers of such talent. The whole physical and mental existence was discovered by Śiva-Yogins as lying within the divine theistic potency of the absolute consciousness in the form of such potency alone. Besides, they saw it as being manifested outwardly, through the divine vibratory activity of such consciousness. The absolute consciousness does, thus, manifest, playfully, its divine powers in the form of the whole phenomenal existence as well as the divine activities of creation, preservation and absorption of the cosmos at times. Besides, it is the result of the theistic nature of the absolute consciousness that it pushes into oblivion its real nature and appears as numerous types of living beings of, multifariously, different types and capabilities, consisting of various types of finite I-consciousness, known in philosophy as souls or beings. Such created beings forget their infinity, purity and divine potency. They pursue petty types of several pleasures through right and wrong means and their right and wrong actions result in pleasure and pain, being experienced by them in constant cycles of births and deaths. All this is an immense type of misery. Such forgetfulness, regarding the real nature of a being, caused by the divine activity of the absolute consciousness or Śiva (known as God in many schools of thought), was seen by Śaiva-Yogins as His another divine activity, termed as Pidhāna or Vilaya, meaning the activity of self-oblivion. Pantheists also say that God becomes Himself the whole phenomena. But Advaita-Vedāntins could not see and tolerate such apparent change in the changeless Brahman and therefore they declared that the phenomenal manifestation was due to the past impressions of beginningless ignorance and was false in nature, just like the appearance of dream-world. Vaiṣṇavas also could not see any change in the form of God. Therefore, they argued that the phenomenal manifestation was due to the multifarious transformations of His divine power alone, forgetting the fact that God and His divine power are, actually, identical meaning any change in the form of one implies such change in the other. But Śaiva-Yogins did not feel the necessity of such suppositions or imaginations with regard to such problem. They realized the fact that phenomenal manifestation is, basically, due to some outward reflections of the divine powers of Paramaśiva, the Almighty God. Since he is playful on account of the exuberance of His blissfulness, He jets out the reflections of His divine powers within the plane of the luminous aspect of His consciousness. Such infinite and pure consciousness is not only, luminously, shining as the infinite, all pervading and all containing spirit, the infinite 'I' but is, always, fully, aware of its divine nature as well. As already argued above, a great poet, experiencing a powerful charge of the awareness of his extraordinary poetic talent, starts at once to reflect it out into the plane of his intellect and speech and that becomes the creation of his poetic world. Lord Śiva, being, constantly, charged with the awareness of His divine powers, is always casting, outwardly, the reflections of such powers to create, to preserve, to absorb, the phenomenon and to conceal as well as to illuminate His really pure and divine nature. No reflection involves any entity into any change or transformation. Crystal does not get transformed, while bearing the reflections of multifarious lights. God is, thus, manifesting all the five divine activities in a reflectionary manner, and doing so, does not get involved in any transformation or change. He is ever changeless. Inwardness or outwardness does not mean here anything related to the conception of space. I-ness or subjectivity is termed as inwardness and this-ness or objectivity is called outwardness. The whole phenomenon is the I of Paramaśiva and that is meant here as its inwardness. Its objective manifestation in the form of "Thisness or that-ness" is meant here as its outwardness. The Lord is quite independent in carrying out His such divine activities in accordance with His divine will and carries them out in multifarious ways, with regard to different worlds of gods, human beings, animals and plants. His independent and playful will does not face at all any restriction. As for the divine laws regarding action and its reward, (cause and effect. etc.), these being included in creation, are meant for created, worldly, souls and, heavenly, beings. The Lord is not bound by them. His realm is that of absolute imdependence and there is no scope for questions 'any' why or 'how' in it.

A sweet experience is relished as quite, immensely sweet, only, in comparison with some unsweet or less sweet experiences. An intuitive realization of the infinite blissfulness, omniscience and omnipotence of the self is tasted as the sweetest virtue, having an intense type of charm, only, when such items are, actually, felt as one's own natural powers, after having remained hidden under ignorance for long, long aeons. This is the key principle of Śaiva monism explaining the problem of creation. This is to say that the Absolute God pushes His infinite blissfulness into oblivion, moves for aeons in the cycles of births and deaths and experiences immense types of misery for ages. That is the initial part of His divine play. In its final part, He, recollecting and realizing His forgotten divine nature, recognizes once again Himself as none other than the Almighty God. Such sweetest and charming recognition of the real nature of the Self is the final aim of the divine five-folded play of the Absolute Lord. Besides, as has already been said, it is the essential nature of the Absolute to manifest the dramatic play of five divine activities. There is no scope for any 'why' with regard to the basic nature of a reality. How absurd would it be to ask as to why is fire warm, why does it shine and so on? Fire, show of its warmths luminosity, etc. would cease to be fire. God, show of His natural tendency to manifest the, wonderfully, different dramatic shows of creation, etc. would lose His divine essence. Besides, if God would not have had such a playful nature to manifest such a show of five divine activities, there would have been nothing except a dreadful and dreary vacuum. Who would then have appreciated or criticised such vacuum? The Vedāntic principle of Brahman, appearing as God, soul and phenomena, just on account of some inexplicable contact with Māyā, brings the Absolute reality to the position of a powerless entity, coming under the effect of something other than itself. Besides, such a principle grants all divine powers of the Godhead to Māyā, a false and an inanimate, as well as a destructible entity, and pushes poor Brahman to a position that comes very close to a nihilistic void. Such a principle of the followers of Śaṅkarācārya was, on such account, criticised by Vaiṣṇava philosophers as being a sort of crypto-Buddhism. As for the Śaivas of Kashmir are concerned, they say that it is a principle that comes very close to nihilism. In fact, neither Śaṅkara, nor Gauḍapāda meant to teach such nihilism. They, simply, intended to assert the fact that the final transcendental truth is beyond the scope of mind, intellect and speech and is, absolutely, changeless. Such a principle has been depicted even by Abhinavagupta in his Anuttarāṣṭīkā. Then, for all practical purposes, they preached a theistic absolutism, which has been accepted as practical truth in, both, the Māṇḍūkya Kārikā and Brahmasūtra-Śāṅkarabhāṣya. Unfortunately, the followers in the line, right from Vācaspatimiśra, emphasised the nihilistic approach and ignored the theistic one. As has already been said, Bhāskararāya of the far south is the only, prominent teacher of Vedāntic school of Śaṅkara, who has done justice to, both, the absolutist and the theistic approaches to the ultimate reality. His works do, really, echo the voices of Gauḍapāda and Śaṅkara, as contained in their works on practical Vedānta, and as put on vibration by them through a charming poetic style in Stotras like Subhagodaya and Saundaryalaharī. Such poetic works present the clear picture of the heart, the faith and the actual practice of such philosophers, but have been ignored by most of their successors. Teachers in the line of Vācaspatimiśra do not even care to go through the Vidyāratnasūtra by Gauḍapāda and Prapañcasāra-Tantra by Śaṅkarācārya. That is, in fact, due to an invisible effect of the Śūnyavāda of Nāgārjuna on their thinking and expression. In short, the eternal reality is, only, the infinite, absolute and pure consciousess, unconditioned by time, space relativity, etc. That is only the metaphysical reality. It is, in fact, beyond the scope of mind, intellect and speech and is thus, an absolute reality. The creation, dissolution etc. of the whole phenomenal existence are, basically, due to the theistic nature of that very Absolute reality. The metaphysical principle of Kashmir Śaivism is ,thus, such, a theistic absolutism. As it is, the nature of this absolute reality to manifest outwardly, such reflections of its divine powers, as do appear in the form of creations, etc. of the whole phenomenal existence, and do also appear as running the whole show in accordance with the divine laws, which also are included in the reflections of such powers, this theism, is the very essential character of the, only, metaphysical absolute reality. An absolute theism is, thus, the main ontological principle of Kashmir Śaivism. Atoms, eternal substances, root-substance Māyā, Avidyā, etc., taken in other Schools of Indian philosophy as the basic causes and sources of the phenomenon, are themselves some created elements, brought about by the Absolute Lord through an outward reflection of His divine powers. Such theory of reflection is, thus, the main cosmogonical theory of Kashmir Śaivism. The Sāṁkhya theory of Pariṇāma, if applied to Absolute, would involve it in change in its character and that would prove the absolute to be an inanimate entity, because, only, such entities undergo transformation. Māyā, taken as the cause of the phenomenal creation, can not be accepted as something other than the Absolute, because such a supposition would imply dualism, which goes against, both, the direct realization of the truth and the teachings of the Śāstras of Siddhas (the perfect beings). Māyā has, therefore, been seen and accepted by Śiva-yogins as a divine power of the Absolute. It is not an outward element, coming in contact with the Absolute and presenting it in the form of God, soul and phenomenon, as argued by the Advaita-Vedāntins. Basically, that divine power of the Absolute, through which all diversity is manifested in the manner of a reflection, is Māyā, which is not, thus, anything foreign to it, but is its own divine essence. It has been defined in Śaivism as that divine power of Paramaśiva, which manifests diversity within the absolute unity and which dissolves such diversity into that absolute unity. This divine power of the Lord is his Māyā-Śakti, which is identical with him and is different from Māyā-Tattva. The creations and dissolutions of all phenomena are, basically, due to the outward and inward movements of the vibratory activities of the divine power of God. All phenomena exist in him in the form of His divine powers, just as all milk-products are present in milk in the form of the basic potentiality of milk. The basic principle of cosmogony of Kashmir Śaivism is, thus, the fact that the eternal, infinite and all powerful pure consciousness, containing all phenomena in it in the form of its divine potentiality, vibrates its powers to and fro, manifests them, outwardly, in the manner of reflections, and, while doing so, does not at all undergo any change in its basic nature. Such, outwardly, reflected powers of the Absolute appear as thirty six Tattvas and seven categories of souls, as well as their outward creation and inward absorption. Such is the detailed explanation of the main cosmogonical principle of Kashmir Śaivism. As far as its cosmology is concerned, it accepts a long hierarchy of divine authorities in charge of different divine activities being conducted, regulated and administered by the Lord appearing at different positions of such higher and lower status. The administeration in gross existence is conducted by gods in heaven. The subtle existence is administered by super gods like the trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra. The finer existence above the heavens and hells is governed at its different levels by Śrīkaṇṭhanātha (Śiva) and many superior Rudras. Beyond that is the pure existence, which is governed at its lowest level by Lord Anantanātha and at the higher levels by Īśvara Bhaṭṭāraka, Sadāśiva Bhaṭṭāraka and Anāśritaśiva Bhaṭṭāraka. That is a brief outline of the hierarchy in the divine administration, drawn in accordance with the cosmological principles of Kashmir Śaivism, based on the authority of the Śaiva Āgamas. The schools of Śaivism in the south do also take such Āgama-passages as authority, but the authors of their philosophical works have not shown sufficient ability in explaining such Āgamic views quite, convincingly, through a philosophical way of expression.

As for the details about the process of cosmogony, Kashmir Śaivism presents its theory of thirty six Tattvas. The ultimate reality is thought about and understood in its two aspects of transcendence and emanence, as it is, both, the transcendent and the emanent reality. In its transcendental aspect, it is pure consciousness and that alone, while in its emanent aspect it is the whole phenomenal existence. The great ancient teachers of Advaita Vedānta, like Gauḍapāda and Śaṅkara, laid, unduly, too much stress on the transcendental aspect of the Absolute reality and that gave a turn to their philosophy towards nihilism. The Śaivas of Kashmir, laying an equal stress on, both, aspects of the Absolute, developed a theory of theistic absolutism, as discussed above. The absolute conciousness has blissfulness as its basic nature. Such blissfulness is a sort of spiritual stir. The inner person of a being does not remain, absolutely, static in a charge of bliss. Such charge of bliss shines as a charm or a sort of a movement-like stir of the inner self that does not move in space. It is a sort of spiritual vibratory activity of bliss, termed as Spanda. An artist has the feeling of such Spanda just before becoming, mentally and physically, active towards the outward creation of his art. The infinite and pure consciousness does also attain a position that can be compared to a sort of spiritual restiveness, caused by a powerful charge of blissfulness and aimed at the action of projecting out the reflections of divine powers within its infinite self. Such spiritual restiveness, termed as Para-Spanda, shines, inwardly, as the transcendental consciousness, termed as Śiva and appears, outwardly, as an urge towards taking up a reflectional form of the whole phenomenon and is termed as Śakti in that aspect. In fact, Śakti and Śiva are not any two separate entities. One and the same Absolute consciousness is termed as such just in order to develop a correct and perfect understanding of its double-edged character. It is just for the sake of the development of such a understanding that the two terms Śiva and Śakti are coined for they and are counted as the two primary elements or Tattvas.

The phenomena lies within the pure and infinite I-consciousness in the form of that very wonderful I-ness. The spiritual stir of Spanda of such consciousness manifests it in the form of simple this-ness. Such this-ness starts, initially, to shine very, faintly, with the result that the infinite consciousness becomes aware of itself as "I am this". I-ness predominates this position and bears just a faint tinge of this-ness. Such position, manifested through the vibratory activity of Spanda, is termed in Śaivism as Sadāśiva-Tattva. Śiva, appearing Himself as Lord Sadāśiva at this initial stage of phenomenal creation is worshipped and adored by beings by the means of a constant repetition of a sort of feeling of their unity with the whole diversity beings of this level and go on having a constant awareness of "I am this". Ahaṃ Idaṃ. Such pure beings are known in Śaivism as Mantramaheśvaras. That is the first step in the actual outward creation and the third Tattva in the thirty six. The next step in phenomenal creation is termed as Īśvaratattva. It is the position of the phenomenal manifestation, at which the objective element of simple this-ness starts to shine more, prominently, and overshadows the subjective element of I-ness. The pure consciouness takes the form of 'This is my self' (Idaṃ Ahaṃ). The subjective I-ness comes down here.to the position of the predicate in this situation, called as Īśvaratattva, the fourth among thirty six. Lord Īśvara is the governing deity at this stage and the beings adoring him at this stage are known as Mantreśvaras. The worship conducted by them consists, simply, of a constant repetition of the awareness shining as 'This is my self'. Lord Īśvara is Paramaśiva, descended to such Tattva. The view-points of unity in diversity and diversity in unity, working among such two categories of beings, is termed in Śaivism as Śuddhavidyā or Sadvidyā. It is counted as the fifth one in the creative process of Tattvas. Śuddhavidyā, moving a step downwards through an outward tendency, is termed as Mahāmāyā. It has not been counted as a separate Tattva, but has been included in Śaiva scriptures as a lower type of Śuddhavidyā. Lord Īśvara, descended to the stage of this Mahāmāyā, is known in Śaivism as Anantanātha or Aghoreśa. The beings residing at such lower step of Śuddhavidyā are known either as Mantra beings or as Vidyeśvaras, adoring, constantly, their immediate master, Anantanātha. Such beings see through a viewpoint of clear diversity. They take themselves as different from the Lord as well as from one-another. Besides, they take the objective element of simple this-ness as different from their subjective I-ness. They see like this- 'I am I and this is this;' Ahaṃ Ahaṃ Idaṃ Idaṃ. Such beings do not lose the awareness of their being pure and infinite consciouness, possessing divine potency. Therefore, they are counted among pure beings, even though they see diversity and are involved in Māyā. These are the five pure Tattvas created by Lord Śiva Himself through the outward vibrations of pure Spanda. The Lord creates Himself one impure Tattva as well and that is known as the Māyātattva, the sixth one in the series. The Tattva is just the outward manifestation of the supreme Māyā-Śakti of the Lord. It consists of the clear view-point of diversity which has a faint relation with Mantra beings, discussed above. Māyā serves in three ways :— (1) it shines as such a view-point, which manifests difference between subject (I-ness) and object (this-ness), (2) one subject and another subject, and (3) one object and another object. Secondly, it covers and conceals the real character of beings in such a way that they do not take the pure and infinite consciousness as their self, but take, instead, the impure and finite consciousness, known as Śūnya, as their 'I', and thirdly, it serves as the main substance (the simple this-ness) out of which all the lower Tattvas do emerge. Such Tattvas consist of all the personal, mental and material substances, serving as the component parts or Upādāna Kāraṇas out of which the whole phenomenal existence does emerge.

Lord Ananta-Nātha, shaking up Māyā, creates out of it five Kañcukas or sheaths that limit the person and the capacities of I-consciousness and present it in the form of multifarious types of finite living beings. It imposes absolute finitude on such I-consciousness. Māyā serves itself as the most powerful sheath, covering and binding the real nature of beings, who do, consequently, lose their unity with the absolute and appear as individuals, as referred above in connection with Mahāmāyā, which is counted as, both, the lower type of pure Vidyā and the higher position of Māyā. Māyā is thus counted as one of the Kañcukas, raising their number to six. The five Kañcukas or sheaths are:– (i) Kalā, limited capacity to do : (2) Vidyā (Aśuddha), limited capacity to know; (3) Rāga, limited interest in only some particular actions and objects; (It should not be confused with that mental attachment which stands against Dveṣa); (4) Niyati, the natural laws of restriction and causation, and (5) Kāla, the concept of time sequence. Lord Anantanātha, applying such Kañcukas to the creative process, produces two basic Tattvas of the Sāṁkhya system. These are (i) Puruṣa, the individual subjective I-consciousness, coming under the limitations of the six Kañcukas, and (ii) Prakṛti the undiversified element of this-ness, the main and unitary objective element. The number of Tattvas upto this step of creation is thirteen. (Pure Tattvas = 5, impure ones = 6, Puruṣa = 1, Prakṛti = 1, total = 13). The next Tattvas are the same as found out and worked out by the masters of the Sāṁkhya system. The difference in the principles lies in the atheistic views of Sāṁkhya and the theistic approach of Śaivas. Īśvarabhaṭṭāraka, when descended to the stage of Prakṛti (Guṇatattva), is known in Śaivism as Śrīkaṇṭhanātha, who in his more active form, called Umāpatināthа, is the Śiva of the epics and Purāṇas. He shakes up the equilibrium of Prakṛti, causes disturbance in its three aspects known as the three Guṇas and creates thus the thirteen instrumental Tattvas of mental existence, as well as the five subtle objective elements and the five such gross elements of physical existence. That is the detailed approach of Kashmir Śaivism to the cosmogonical process of creation. Kashmir Śaivism alone has explored the origin and cause of Prakṛti and Māyā and has explained philosophically the Āgamic terms like Mantras, Mantreśvaras, Kañcukas, etc. It has, besides, located the origin of the three Guṇas in the three divine powers of the Absolute and has clarified the difference between Māyā-Tattva and Māyā-Śakti.

Kashmir Śaivism has worked classified of the living beings in seven categories. Such Beings who have realized their unity with the Absolute, but have not yet merged their individuality into it, for the purposes of :— (1) tasting the extacy of self-realization, while yet living in this universe, (2) giving instructions to worthy aspirants, and (3) explaining the finer principles of philosophy by means of books and commentaries, are known as Śivas, the purest beings. They are sometimes called Akalās. Light has already been thrown on the nature of the other three categories of pure beings, known as Mantra-Maheśvaras, Mantreśvaras and and Mantras (or Vidyeśvaras). All these are counted in pure creation. The fifth category of beings is that of Vijñānākalās. Such beings have the realization of being, only, the pure and infinite consciousness, but do not have the feeling of their divine potency. The position of such beings is, mostly, attained by Advaita-Vedāntins, relying on the one-sided approach to Vedānta, laying stress only on the transcendental aspect of the Absolute and ignoring its theistic nature. The beings attaining the positions of Apavarga of the Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika, Kaivalya of Sāṁkhya-yoga and Nirvāṇa of Buddhism attain the state of Suṣupti and, being called as Pralayākalas, they are counted among bounded souls. All beings from an amoeba to gods in the heavens are bonded beings, termed as Sakalas and called paśus as well. This is the classification of beings into seven categories, as worked out in Kashmir Śaivism. The philosophical writers in the South have not been able to explain well the nature of such categories of beings.

Both Bhukti, or enjoyment and Mukti, or liberation, have been accepted as the aims of life and the fruits of practice in Śaivism. An aspirant is allowed to enjoy the pleasures of life in accordance with the traditional social discipline, though renunciation has also been praised. Most of the ancient masters of Śaivism were living as householders. They did not prescribe any practices of wandering monks. An aspirant is advised to approach a right preceptor, study the philosophy of Śaiva monism, get initiation in Śaiva-Yoga and practise it, regularly, with a firm devotion for the Lord. When its practice yields, as its fruit, some variety of self-bliss, one's flair for sensual enjoyments does, automatically, calms down, as the sweetness of such sensual enjoyments fades away in comparison to the charm of that divine bliss. Such loss of interest in sensual enjoyments is known as Anādara-Virakti. Forcible suppression of emotions and instincts, such control of the mind and starvation of senses, recommended in many other paths of sādhanā, have been taken in Śaivism as dangerous, because such practices are liable to create such unwanted reactions in one's mind and senses which may push him to spiritual downfall. Theoretical knowledge of the principles of Śaiva monism and practice in Śaiva-Yoga have been prescribed as the means to attain liberation. Devotion to the Lord has been, highly, praised by the great masters of Śaivism like Utpaladeva. It is, in fact, a, highly, powerful aid to success in Śaiva-Yoga, because, it saves a Yogin from such powers of the Lord which conduct the game of pushing down beings to spiritual degeneration and such a thing helps him in marching ahead towards the desired success. Besides, a Yogin is very often liable to fall prey to a tendency towards some misuse of the super-human powers, aroused by practice in Śaiva-Yoga and such misuse becomes a great hurdle in his spiritual progress. An aspirant, having devotion for the Lord, is very often saved, automatically, from such tendency towards misuse of Yogic attainments. A Śiva-Yogin, working under an intensegracious attitude of the Lord, does not take even any, heavenly, pleasures as the ultimate goal of life. He proceeds ahead towards the correct self-realization termed as Pratyabhijñā.

He is not interested in Sālokya, Sāmīpya and Sāyujya types of existence, because he counts such positions as some superior types of Bhoga or enjoyment and not mokṣa or liberation. The states of Apavarga, Kaivalaya and Nirvāṇa have not been counted in Śaivism as any types of permanent Mokṣa. Such positions have been counted in Suṣupti, which is a state of ignorance and bondage, though the process of transmigration remains suspended in such position for some time. The Brahmanirvāṇa of the Advaita Vedānta has been taken as a position devoid of divine potency. It is the position of Vijñānākalās, who have been accepted in Kashmir Śaivism as, only partly, liberated beings, while the Siddhānta Śaiva of the South counts them with bonded ones. The positions right from those of Vidyeśvaras (Mantra beings) to Mantra-Maheśvaras have been accepted as, gradually, higher states of actual liberation. Yogins who may have realized their perfect unity with the Absolute Śiva, are counted as Śivas and their position has been praised as the highest type of liberation in this very world. A Yogin who has realized the truth about himself and phenomenal existence and is still living in this mortal world, just to complete the fructification of his Prārabdha, is taken as a Jīvanmukta, that is, a being liberated even while living in this very world. Some of such Jīvanmuktas develop divine powers of the Godhead and their Jīvanmukti is taken as, highly, superior in character. Some Yogins attain some posts of high authority in the heirarchy of divine administration before becoming one with the Absolute Lord. All such courses and positions have been counted in Śaivism as, highly, desirable and the practical aspect of Śaivism has been taken as a definite means to such ends.

Liberation from bondage has in most of the schools of Indian thought, been said to be a result of efforts on the part of bonded people, but Śaivism takes the divine grace and wrath of the Lord as the basic causes of liberation and bondage of beings. Happiness would lose all its charm if there were only alone, without any element of misery to preced or to succeed it. Light offers a charm only happiness when it is preceded by darkness. Besides, to be, infinitely, blissful is not so charming as to discover oneself as such, after having lost such a sight for ages. In the first part of the divine play of the Lord, He conceals His real nature of purity, divinity, etc. and in its second part, He bestowes His divine grace on some bonded being, with the result that such a being comes into contact with an advanced Yogin, having knowledge of the Yogic means of self-realization and possessing the power to exercise grace on a disciple, who, treading the three folded path of :— (1) the theoretical knowledge about the reality of all phenomena as explained in Śaivism, (2) regular practice in Śaiva-yoga, and (3) a, highly, devotional attitude towards the Lord; recognizes himself as being one with the infinite, pure and blissful consciousness, projecting his divine powers of Godhead and conducting himself the five divine activities of phenomenal creation, etc. Such recognition of the correct nature of the self is termed as Pratyabhijñā , the recollection of ones forgotten real nature. It results in (1) liberation from bondage, while one lives yet in a mortal form, (2) development of divine powers to create to absorb and so on, (3) perfect unity with the absolute after shedding off his present mortal form, or (4) some sort of perfect liberation by stages through a process of elevation from step to step in the divine hierarchy. All that depends on the degree of the force of the grace bestowed by the Lord on a being.

Śaivism of Kashmir recognizes several systems of practice resulting in the liberation of a being. The Śaiva Āgamas count the main paths of such practice in an order of higher merit as those of Vedācāra, Śaivācāra, Vāmāc aara, Dakṣiṇācāra, Kaulācāra, Matācāra and Trikācāra.

Vedācāra is the practical path of realization of the truth as discussed in Vedic Upaniṣads. It consists of Devayāna and Pitṛyāna courses of elevation. Śaivācāra is the practice of devotional worship of Śiva in the form of linga or idol, assisted by the practice of Pātañjala Yoga. Vāmācāra is the typical Tāntric method of Sādhanā, conducted with the help of five Makāras. Being very attractive and sweet to the senses and mind, it is named Vāma, the beautiful. Dakṣiṇācāra consists of Tāntric Sadhanā conducted under a puritanic discipline, without the use of wine, etc. It is, virtually, the same path of practice known in the south as Samayācāra. Being opposed to Vāmācara, it is called as Dakṣiṇa Kaulācāra also involves the use of five Makāras, but, unlike Vāmācāra, it is not conducted and practised, openly, publicly and shamelessly, without any hesitation, but is practised, secretly, in closed-door compartments, called Kulacakras. Being quick in results and yielding, simultaneously, the attainments of, both, Bhoga enjoyment and Mokṣa-liberation, it was, popularly, practised by most of the great ancient masters of Kashmir Śaivism. The character of the Matācara is not known, clearly, at present. It must have been the practical path of Sadhanā, taught in the eight monistic Āgamas known as Matāṣṭaka. The highest path of practice is the Trikācāra, based on the three Āgamas of the highest standard, named as Siddha-Tantra, Mālinī-Tantra and Vāmaka-Tantra (Nāmaka-Tantra). The essence of such Tantras has been drawn by Abhinavagupta and presented to aspirants of the highest degree in the form of works like Tantrāloka, Tantra-Sāra, Parātrīśikā-Vivarṇa and Mālinī-Vijaya-Vārtika. A Tāntric text known as Vijñānabhairava also deals with it. Trika has been discussed in Śivasūtra, Śivasūtra-Vārtika (By Bhāskarar) and famous Spandakārikā. Works on the Krama method of Śāktopāya do also belong to the Trika system. Abhinavagupta gives Trika a place higher even to Kaula system. It consists of theoretical studies and practical Trikayoga, both, being conducted with an, immensely, devotional attitude towards the Lord. Such knowledge and devotion help its Yogic practice in impressing, deeply, the philosophy of theistic absolutism on, both, the head and the heart of a practitioner and results, generally, in the attainment of liberation while, an aspirant is yet living in a mortal form. A frequent practice in the intuitive realization of one's divine nature, conducted with the help of Trikayoga, results in the development of divine powers, while one is still living in flesh and blood and leads to absolute unity with the Lord after he sheds off his mortal form.

Patañjali starts with the lowest practice in Yoga and leads a practitioner, step by step, to the highest type of Samādhi. But Abhinavagupta starts with the highest type of Trikayoga and comes down, step by step, to its lower varieties. Ācārya Amṛtavāgbhava, a Śaiva philosopher of the present age, used to say that one should not try to board a bullock cart, when an airoplane may be available. He used to advise intelligent aspirants to try the highest type of Yoga, and to come down to a lower, one only, when a person fails in grasping and practising the highest one. The highest type of Trikayoga is known as Śāmbhavopāya. It is a practice in such a use of one's strong will-power, which carries him, directly, to the highest step in the Turīya type of animation. A practitioner of such Yoga feels, for the time being, that he is none other than the Almighty God, consisting of infinite and pure consciousness, vibrating, outwardly, such powers of His Godhead which appear in the form of the five divine activities of creation, etc. Mind, withdrawn from its objective activities of thinking etc. The practitioner turns about towards the self and is lost in the brilliant lustre of pure consciousness. The, exactly, real nature of the self is then realized, intuitionally, without the help of any mental apparatus. Śāmbhava-yoga is thus a practice in being the absolute and not in any type of mental becoming. Its practice transcends the activities of the whole mental apparatus. Mind, intellect and ego become dissolved, for the time being, in the practice of such intuitional realization of the self by the self. A special psycho-physical posture, known as Śāmbhavī-Mudrā, is helpful to a Yogin in the start of such practice. A practitioner has to be, sufficiently careful and vigilant in its practice, so that he is not caught into sleeping type of situation. If he falls into a state of dreamless sleep, his practice shall come down either to that of Zen Yoga of Bodhidharma, or to the Nirbīja-Samādhi of Patañjali, to the transcendental meditation of Maheśa-Yogi, to the practice propagated by the followers of Shri J. Krishna-Murti. Such practices do not at all reveal to a Yogin his, absolutely, divine character. Since a Yogin has neither to do anything, not to know anything in its practice, but has just to realize, directly, his pure, infinite and divine nature. Such Śāmbhava-Yoga, in the aspect of its perfection, has been termed by Abhinavagupta as Anupāya-Yoga of the Trika system. Such perfect Yoga was prevalent in Mohenjodaro. As has been said before, it was practised by ancient sages. Lord Durvāsas taught it to Sri Krishṇa. He discussed it in detail in the sixth chapter of his Bhagavadgītā. One, highly, esoteric item of such yoga-practice has been described by Yājñavalkya in his Smṛti. Its detailed aspect is discussed in a dialogue between him and Gārgī. Such dialogue has been quoted by Śaṅkarācārya in his commentary on Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad.

Two other prominent types of Śāmbhava-Yoga have been dealt with in works like Tantrāloka. These are termed as Mātṛkā and Mālinī. The absolute consciousness is, in fact, bearing the whole show of phenomenal existence and all functions related to it within its spiritual lustre of self-awareness, in the manner of multifarious reflections. That is the truth about phenomenal existence, In order to realize, actually, such truth, a Śivayogin, while practising a superior variety of Śāmbhava-Yoga, puts in action his strong power of will and, as its result, finds his own pure self, consisted of pure and infinite consciousness, bearing the reflections of his own divine powers, shining in the form of the whole phenomenal existence. Finding, intuitionally, his pure consciousness, made, immensely, beautiful and charming by such reflections, he becomes merged into a, highly, sweet variety of self-bliss. Enjoying his such divine and blissful nature, he feels that he has after all attained the final goal of life and the highest result of Yoga-Sādhanā. Such a Yogin is to be adored as the Lord Himself, living in a physical form. This is a superior variety of Śāmbhava-Yoga as discussed in Tantrāloka and Tantrasāra. It is called as Mātṛkā-yoga. The word Mātṛkā denotes the Indian alphabet. The Yogin concerned discovers his pure-self as Paramaśiva, shining in the form of 'a' sound termed as Anuttara. Then he discovers the sounds from ā to aḥ as identical with his divine powers. The created Tattvas, right from earth to Sadāśiva, shine as identical with consonant-sounds from ka to ha or kṣa. Seeing, intuitively, his infinite and pure consciousness, made, charmingly, beautiful by the reflections of his divine powers, shining in the forms of Tattvas and sounds, the Śāmbhava-Yogin experiences the highest type of self-satisfaction. Such a Yogin attains Jīvanmukti or liberation while living in the world. He does not require any more effort in any theological practice. Living up to the complete exhaustion of his Prārabdha Karman, he devotes the remaining portion of his mortal life to writing books on Śaivism, teaching curious students and initiating worthy disciples.

As we see that phenomena, all the divine powers of the Lord and all their reflections, appearing as Tattvas, do not shine here in any fixed order of succession, but appear as mixed together in multifarious ways. There is one more important variety of Śāmbhava-Yoga in accordance with which, a Śiva-yogin sees the alphabetical sounds, his divine powers and their reflections mixed together in an, absolutely, irregular order of succession, starting with the sound na and ending in the sound pha, with all other sounds, both consonants and vowels, arranged in an irregular order. The Yogin has a revelation of the self bearing the alphabetical sounds, along with their-reflections, appearing as Tattvas, in a disturbed order and in doing so, experiences quickly the sweet taste of the direct recognition of his divine nature. Such Śāmbhava Yoga, is known as Mālinī-Yoga. Being closer to the exact situation of the phenomenon, it is quicker in delivering its results and yields, both, Bhukti and Mukti simultaneously. It has, therefore, enjoyed greater popularity among the Śaivas of Kashmir. Ācārya Abhivavagupta has explained it in his Vivaraṇa commentary on Parā-Trīśikā (wrongly known as Parā-Triṁśikā). A few more types of Śāmbhava have been taught by the lord in Vijñānabhairava, for instance; taking hold of the connecting link (consisting of pure consciousness) between any successive mental ideas (V. Bh. 61); withdrawing one's attention from all objective elements and discovering his real nature through an attentive vigilence towards his self awareness, shining in his heart (Ibid. 62); discovering one's pure self awareness in-between the states of waking and dreaming (Ibid. 75); and withdrawing one's mind from constant momentary ideations (Ibid. 108). But only the above mentioned two varieties of Yoga have so far been discussed in detail. Its still higher variety, practised with the help of Śāmbhavīmudrā, has not been discussed in such works, because thus variety of yoga, if described, clearly, could have been grasped, easily, even by some unworthy people, who might have misused its results and created disturbances in the working of the divine administration, as was done by some demons, like Rāvaṇa, in the past. A relation between word (or sound) and the phenomenal creation was discovered by some mystics in the Middle East and Europe as well; but the nations in such regions of the world could not develop the idea, philosophically. It became popular among philosophers, only, in India and was, specially, developed in Kashmir alone.

An aspirant, who may not be quick enough to practise any variety of Śāmbhava-Yoga, can take up some variety of Śākta-Yoga. Such Yoga consists of practices in mental contemplation of the truth about one's self and all phenomena, as discussed by expert Yogins in their philosophical works like; Śivadṛṣṭi, Īśvarapratyabhijñā, etc. Such contemplation is performed in several ways as Homa, Yāga, Vrata, Snāna, etc., all of which are symbolic in character. For instance, the infinite consciousness is contemplated upon as an infinite, holy fire and all mental and physical phenomena are offered to it as oblations by means of mere contemplation and this is the Homa in Śāktopāya.

With average type of practitioners it becomes very difficult to practise the absorption of the whole phenomenal existence, which is, wonderfully, vast and multifarious in its character, into their fine and pure I-consciousness, by the means of such contemplations. Śivānandanātha, the master of some northern centre of Śaivism (Uttarapīṭha), probably, situated in Kashmir, discovered an easier type of Śāktopāya. He classified the whole existence into three categories of Pramātṛ the knowing subject, Prameya, the object to be known and Pramāṇa, the means of knowing. Each of these three was to be further contemplated upon in four aspects of creation, preservation, absorption and that of its existence in the transcendental reality. The phenomenon was, thus, analysed into (3x4 = 12) twelve categories and the practice of Śāktopāya was taught to be conducted with respect to such twelve categories of the phenomenal existence, one by one in turn (Krama). Such, comparatively, easier method of Śāktopāya became, highly, popular under the name Kramanaya. Since a practitioner had to arouse his creative energy named Kālī and absorb through it all the twelve categories of phenomenal existence, this Kramanaya came to be known as Kālīnaya and the twelve aspects of such energy came to be worshipped as twelve Kālīs, eulogised in the two Karmastotras of Siddhanātha and Abhinavagupta. This easier type of Śāktopāya has been discussed in detail in the fourth chapter of Tantrāloka as the first and the foremost variety of Śāktopāya.

Next in turn comes Āṇavopāya, the means of liberation suited, mostly, to finite beings, called Aṇus. Its system has been classified into five types of contemplative practice termed as Dhyāna or Buddhi-Dhyāna, Uccāra, Karaṇa, Dhvani and Sthānakalpanā.

A Dhyānayogin has to contemplate the unity of Pramātṛ, Prameya and Pramāṇa in his heart and has to visualize such unity as a brilliant fire of consciousness, surrounded by the above mentioned twelve Kālīs as its flames moving to and fro. Then he has to contemplate that these divine powers, named Kālīs, while coming into contact with outward objects through the outlets of senses and organs, conduct the activities of creation, preservation, absorption, and unification with the Absolute with respect to such objects. A regular practice in constant repetition of such contemplative meditation makes the impression of divine powers conducting the divine activities, so deep upon of a practitioner that he realizes himself as none other than the Absolute God, conducting such activities with respect to the whole phenomenal existence. That is the wounderful Dhyānayoga of Kashmir Śaivism, explained as such by Abhinavagupta and learnt as such by him from Śri Śambhunātha of the Jālandharapiṭha at Kaṅgrā. Such Dhyāna-yoga is not found in any other Yoga system.

The second variety of Āṅavayoga is known as Uccāyoga, practice in which is targetted towards the five functions of one's life force. Such functions are known as Prāṇa, Apāna, Samāna, Udāna and Vyāna. The character of such functions is quite different from that, which has been assigned to them in Nyāya Śāstra. In accordance with Śaivism these are the five functions of the process and activity of living, going on in the four states of Jāgrat, Svapna, Suṣupti and Turyā. All types of activities of elimination, conducted through ones body, senses, organs, mind, intellect, etc. and the movements of respiration are taken in Trika system as Prāṇa and such types of assimilation.

Imitation are always going on in both the waking and dreaming states of Prāṇa. Such a function of animation in which, both, elimination and assimilation become one, as in Susupti, is termed here as Samāna. There is a function of Prāṇa which is experienced, as a movement of illumination, or rather revelation, going on through one's spinal chord, reducing to ashes all the mental ideation and proceeding ahead towards the self-evident pure consciousness, shining beyond all mental concepts. Such a function of Prāṇa is termed in Śaivism as Udāna. It proceeds ahead and attains the position of all-pervading infinite and pure aspect of Prāṇa, known here as Vyāna. Such approach to the five Prāṇas is prevalent in Kashmir Śaivism alone. Most probably, a portion (25- 30) of the fourth chapter of Bhagavadgītā may also have been aimed at such delineation of these five functions of Prāṇa and may have been based on the knowledge imparted to Sri Krishṇa by sage Durvāsās. The experiences of such functions of Prāṇa result in the sweet taste of six varieties of self bliss, discovered, only, in the Trika system of Śaivism as follows :—

(i) Direct realization of the finite but pure I-consciousness results in the experience of Nijānanda. (ii) The revelation of its being free from the trinity of (a) Finite subjecthood (b) objecthood and (c) the means to know and to do, gives rise to another variety of self-bliss termed as Nirānanda. (iii) The reduction of Prāṇa and Apāna into their unitary form known as Samāna, gives rise to the self-bliss known in Śaivism as Parānanda. (iv) The full-fledged position of Samāna reveals the unity of all objective phenomena and such position yields a higher type of self-bliss termed here as Brahmānanda. (v) The Udāna function of animation enlightens a still higher type of Pure self bliss, known as Mahānanda. (vi) Vyāna, revealing the infinite consciousness as the real essence and the eternal aspect of every thing, gives rise to Cidānanda. Beyond these six categories of the, gradually, higher types of Yogic bliss, lies that infinite and eternal self-bliss which is termed as Jagadānanda. It is that infinite bliss of the Absolute reality, which is responsible for the manifestation of the five divine activities of creation, etc. The experience of such categories of selfbliss is the result of the Uccārayoga of the Trika system.

The third variety of Āṇava-yoga is known as Karaṇa-yoga. It consists of self-contemplation conducted with the help of meditation on certain nerve-centres, nerve-complexes, physical positions (Mudrās) etc. It has not been clarified by any ancient author. Abhinavagupta says that Karaṇa is a, highly, secret doctrine and must, therefore, be learnt, directly, from a teacher. In fact, the essence of the above mentioned varieties of Yoga cannot be, exactly, grasped or brought into practice, even though delineated, clearly. Therefore, there is no danger of their being misused. But the process of Karaṇayoga, taking one's gross body as the focus of meditation, can, easily, be grasped even by an unworthy practitioner, who may misuse it, as did the ancient Rākṣasas like; Tāraka, Hirṇayakaśipu and Rāvaṇa. Therefore, it has been kept secret. Below Karaṇa is the position of Dhvani-yoga. It is, nearly, the same as the Surata-yoga of the present day Rādhā-Swamins and the ancient Kabira-Panthis. Śaivas add the contemplation of unity with the Absolute to it. Another variety of this Yoga is known as Varṇa-yoga, in which several types of hues are seen by pressing one's eyelids. As Dhvani and this Varṇa do not reveal one's identity with the Absolute, these have not been discussed at length in Tantralāka.

The lowest category of Trika-Yoga is termed as Sthāna-Kalpanā, in which, time and space are made the targets of contemplative meditation. The, successively, longer and longer units of time, even up to the long ones of universal creation and absorption, are contemplated upon as being contained in one breathing time of a Yogin. In the same way, all the regions of the outward existence in the universe are, gradually, seen through imagination as being contained in one's own physical form. Such practices help in shaking off the bindings of time and space and in leading a practitioner to the revelation of his infiniteness. Both, time and space, are to be meditated upon in their three aspects of grossness, subtleness and fineness. Time is calculated through ideas. Ideas can be measured through words, syllables, and letters, called Pada, Mantra and Varṇa. Space can be measured through the conception of Bhuvanas (region in space), Tattvas (as their components) and Kalās as the finer forms of Tattvas. These are the paths of objective meditation, known as Ṣaḍadhva-Yoga.

An advanced Śivayogin can liberate a being with the help of certain rites in the performance of Dīkṣā. The disciples of such preceptor do not require any hard efforts on their own part. A big portion of Tantrāloka is devoted to the delineation of such methods of wonderful Dīkṣās, the rites of initiation. For instance, initiation of a person who is just about to die; or is already dead, or has died and is now in some other life and so on. One of the rites of such initiation pulls the soul of a dead disciple from the existence where his past actions may have carried him. It is, then, made to enter into an effigy made of Kusha grass and all the rites of Mokṣadīkṣā are performed with the result that the soul concerned becomes liberated from all bondage. A disciple, whose desires for enjoyments have not yet exhausted, is directed to some higher sphere in the universe. He gets liberation after tasting the, heavenly, enjoyments to his full satisfaction. There are rites to test the successfulness of an initiation and to see whether an initiation has, actually, liberated the disciple concerned. He is weighed against a consecrated garland of flowers. If his weight is still heavier than it, then his initiation is to be repeated. Such wonderful rites have been discussed in detail in Tantrāloka of Abhinavagupta, which deals, in addition, with many important rituals to be performed by preceptors and disciples during the whole year, as well as on special occasions. The Master comes down to the rules and regulations about rituals like the phallus-worship and occasional rites. The Tāntric Mantras, Mudrās and Maṇḍalas, though dealt with in different and separate chapters, have not been, fully, clarified on account of apprehension of their being misused by any unworthy practitioners. This is the detailed outline of the practical system of the Trika-ācāra, as discussed by Abhinavagupta.

Śaivism does not waste any energy in finding out new solutions to problems of philosophy, solved already well by the authors of other schools. As it has accepted most of the findings by teachers of Sāṁkhya system with respect to cosmogony, so has it accepted the principles of epistemology as worked out by the Kumarila Bhaṭṭa's sub-school of Mīmāṁsā.

Accordingly, it accepts the validity of the six Pramāṇas of the Mīmāṁsā school, so far as the mundane dealings of the world, as well as some logical discussions on the topics of philosophy are concerned. But, in the ears of the ultimate reality, it has been taken in Śaivism as lying beyond the scope of such Pramāṇas. In addition, Śaivism has laid high emphasis on self-awareness, termed as Sva-Samvedanā, as the basic proof, on which the six Pramāṇas of Mīmāṁsā school are based. No such Pramāṇa can be of any use, or can stand on its own legs, if it does not get support from Sva-Samvedanā, the self awareness. The Absolute reality shines through such self awareness and through it Yogins discover and recognize themselves as the Absolute God, who realizes, thus, His own divine nature through such superior proof which lies beyond all Pramāṇas as their base.

So far as the authority of scriptures and other written works is concerned, Śaivism takes Vedas and Śmṛtis as the Pramāṇas suited to common masses and advises Yogins also to follow them, so as to set examples for others. But, so far as the validity of the higher principles of philosophy is concerned, the written works composed or uttered by :— (i) wise men (ii) Ṛṣis or the discoverers of the Vedic hymns, (iii) Gods like; Vāyu, Agni, etc. who are believed to have uttered their concerned Purāṇas, (iv) Brahmā, the ancient singer of Vedic hymns, (v) Viṣṇu, who uttered the Pāñcarātra Āgamas, (vi) Rudra the author of Śaiva Āgamas like Rudra-Yāmala, (vii) Īśvara Bhaṭṭāraka, (viii) Sadāśiva Bhaṭṭāraka, (ix) Śakti Bhaṭṭārika and (x) Śiva Bhaṭṭāraka, all the four being the original teachers of the Śaiva Āgamas of respectively higher standards, have been accepted as, gradually, higher authorities on the profound mysteries, practical aspects of superior philosophical significance and the secrets of esoteric doctrines of practical theology. The Trika Āgamas have been assigned the highest position in such matters and Mālinī-Vijaya Āgama has been announced as being the highest one among the three (Trika).

So far as the principles of ethics are concerned, Kashmir Śaivism, though a Tāntric system of thought and practice, does not at all raise any voice against the age-old Vedic religious principles and social discipline. These have been accepted as very essential for the common masses. Many other non-Vedic systems like Jainism, Buddhism, Vīra-Śaivism, Sikkhism and some modern sects like those of Rādhāswamins; Deva-Samājis etc. and the followers of modern teachers like, J. Krishṇamoorthy, Maheśa Yogin, etc. do preach rebellious movements against Vedic religion, but the Śaivism of Kashmir did not do so. It accepts the Vedic traditions as the best ones suited to common masses and prescribes some superior doctrines of Śaiva Āgamas for the aspirants of higher standards. But even those had not to ignore the Vedic religion. They in order to set examples for common men, have to follow it and to practise, side by side, some Āgamic Sādhanās for the purpose of self-realization. Most of the ancient master of Kashmir Śaivism lived like Vedic Brahmins, following the essential traditions of Brahmanism. Such traditions are followed by them even now. Kashmir Śaivism did not thus create any religious confusion among the masses. These Śaivas used to perform all the essential practices of Brahmanism, so that common folk would not go astray by following their foot-prints.

It is a fact that these Śaivas did not attach too much importance to Brahmanic principles of ethics and did recommend Sādhanās like; Vāmācara, Kaulācāra and Matācāra, which prescribe the use of five Makāras, prohibited in Vedic religion. But the Śaivas of Kashmir used to practise such Sādhanās quite, secretly, in closed door compartments, called Kulacakras and, consequently, such practices did not disturb Brahmanism and did not have any unwanted effect on the faith of masses. A junior practitioner of the Trika system had to observe, highly, strict discipline in day-to-day life and Abhinavagupta devotes a big portion of the chapter of Tantrāloka dealing with Samaya-Dīkṣā to such discipline. The Trika system prescribes, thus, a useful combination of freedom and discipline.

No other school of thought goes so deep into the secrets and details of the theory and practice of Darśana, the philosophy of the spirit, as Kashmir Śaivism goes. It surpasses all such schools in describing the minute details of philosophy and practical theology. Such a, highly, developed school of thought did not spread, sufficiently, in the areas outside Kashmir in the past. There were two main causes of its remaining more or less confined to the Valley. One of such causes has been the fact that the western region of India was over run by fanatic Muslim invaders just after the perfect evolution of Śaivism in Kashmir. The other cause is the fact that the followers of Śaṅkarācārya had established a high popularity of Advaita Vedānta at the great centres of learning and the important courts of rulers in India to such a great extent that scholars did not make any search for any better developed philosophy. The patronage of powerful rulers and well established scholars had given rise to a belief that nothing better than Vedānta can be available anywhere in the world.

Madhurāja came to Kashmir from the South and learnt Śaivism at the Āshrama of Abhinavagupta. His son, Varadaraja also visited Kashmir and learnt the subject from Kṣemarāja. His Vārtika on Śivasūtra introduced some principles of Śaivism to scholars in the South, but did not have much effect at the centres of learning, because following the scriptural way of expression, it does not deal with the subject through a philosophical method. The works of Somānanda and Utpaladeva, along with the commentaries by Abhinavagupta, did not, generally, reach the great centres of learning for centuries. Maheśvarānanda is the first such philosopher, who tried to propagate Śaiva monism out side Kashmir, though in his own way. Mādhavācārya of Vijayanagaram possessed just a little knowledge of the subject, but not its right appreciation. Nearly, same has been the case with Dr. S. Rādhākrishnan. Immense reverence towards the philosophy of Śaṅkara, as explained by Vācaspati Mishra, has been standing in the way of the spread of the popularity of Kashmir Śaivism for more than a millennium of years. Shri J.C. Chatterjee has been the first research scholar who brought the importance of Kashmir Śaivism to light by writing on it in English and by publishing some of its basic works by some ancient masters. Dr. K.C. Pandey has been the second scholar who carried ahead such mission of Shri Chatterjee. Nearly, all the important schools of Indian philosophy, except of course, the Mīmāṁsā School, ignore the mundane aspects of life and lay high emphasis, only, on the attainment of liberation from bondage which, according to Śaivism, is of different standards, as has already been discussed. Most of such schools ignore the views of the ancient Vedic seers of the truth about life. Such seers had laid higher emphasis on the mundane aims of life, classified as Dharma, Artha and Kāma for the purpose of common masses and had prescribed the courses of higher philosophy aimed at Mokṣa, for just an, exceptionally, meritorious aspirants and these had been mystically, discussed in Upaniṣads. Such discourses of Upaniṣads did not, however, discuss any socio-political problems of the nation though philosophy is after all meant for happy life in this world and such life after death. Neither of such aims of life should have been ignored. Philosophy in the west was applied to education, sociology, politics, administration etc, but in India, it confined itself to individual spiritual attainments alone. Atharva-Veda had devoted some of its important chapters to such topics as health, politics, administration, agriculture, etc. which the Upaniṣadic seers of the truth counted in Avidyā and took spiritualism only as Vidyā, the main topic discussed in them. But the very first Upaniṣad named Īśāvāsya, says in clear terms that :— (i) both Vidyā and Avidyā are the aims of life, (ii) an aspirant, ignoring Avidyā, loses the both and (iii) Avidyā, including all mundane problems of life, should be solved first and the higher spiritual problems should be pursued afterwards by the means of Vidyā. Lord Kṛṣṇa says in clear terms that some exceptional person among thousands tries to attain Siddhi and, only, some exceptional aspirant knows me (the Absolute truth) quite, correctly. Spiritualism is not so cheap as it has been made by writers on Indian philosophy. Its finer aspect is not very often meant for common folk, but only for a few meritorious aspirants.

Manu, the great and wonderful compiler and interpreter of the Vedic religion and philosophy, had said in clear terms that Rājadharma, the system of politics and administration, was the main foundation, on which all other Dharmas of Varṇas and Āśramas could stand. Lord Kṛṣṇa, the most important interpreter of Indian religion and philosophy, laid high emphasis on such Rājadharma in his Bhagavadgītā and brought to light its correct essence on so many occasions in Mahābhārata. He spent the greater portion of his mature human life in setting right the politics of the nation and in establishing a just administration in India. But, alas! Most of our philosophers, right from Mahāvīra and Buddha, ignored the mundane problems of individuals and the whole nation to such an extent that thinkers started to devote themselves to several types of impracticable idealism. Patronage given to Buddhism by great emperors like Aśoka and Kaniṣka and the mythological interpretation given by Aśvaghoṣa to the life of Buddha established the supremacy of such impracticable idealism among the masses in India. Its impact became so deep rooted that even leaders of the revival of Brahmanism could not avoid it, with the result that Indian philosophy as a whole attained a position of an, utterly, impracticable idealism of several types and norms. Even the AdvaitaVedānta of Śaṅkarācārya, which aimed at the refutation of such non-Vedic philosophies and the re-establishment of Vedic religion, adopted, unwillingly, the same impracticable idealism, expressed in a Vedic style. Had the great teacher of Advaita Vedānta taken into consideration the assertions made by Manu regarding Rājadharma and the political guidance given to many heroes by Lord Krishṇa or even the views of the great Cāṇakya, as expressed by him in his Kauṭilya Arthaśāstra, he could have very easily succeeded through his great influence in establishing a confederation of Indian, princely, states in such a way that the country would not have gone into slavery for about a millennium of years. Too much propagation of such an idealism, which was not at all practicable by a considerable number of people and was yet worked out by most of the Indian philosophers, has been one of the main causes of the problems of India and Hinduism. What a wonder? We have scores of books on all subjects, while having only one important work, the Kauṭilya Arthaśāstra on politics? This shows as to what extent has this most important subject been ignored by our philosophical teachers. Samartha Swāmī Rāmadās is, perhaps, the only medieaval teacher of religion and philosophy who laid greater stress on Vyavahāra than on Paramārtha and directed his disciple, Śivājī to set right the political and administrational system in the country.

Though the Śaivism of Kashmir does not ignore the mundane aims of life of the masses; prescribes different courses suited to their psycho-physical capabilities and is thus meant for, both, the common people, pursuing the mundane aims of life, and special aspirants desirous to attain some far higher varieties of spiritual emancipation; yet a great locuna has been left in its academic development and practical propagation. Such locuna, the highest common factor among all the main schools of Indian thought, is its negligence towards the socio-political aspect of the common people and also towards the establishment of a just, honest, efficient and disciplined administration. Had great philosophers and Yogins like; Abhinavagupta taken into consideration the deteriorating socio-political and administrative system in Kashmir, the Valley could have been able to save itself from forced Muslimization; great libraries would not have been burnt, important Āgamic scriptures referred to in works like Tantrāloka-Viveka, would have been available even now, many, highly, important commentaries like, Śivadṛṣṭyālocana, Kramakeli, Siddhitrayī-Vimarśinī, etc. would not have been lost and Kashmir, the home of Śaiva-monism, would not have gone into the hands of fanatic Muslim fundamentalists. Even the great authors of Kashmir Śaivism did not, thus, try to save our philosophy from the common locuna of indifference towards the socio-political situations of the nation.

Our great political leaders, in the present age prepared such an idealistical constitution, which is rather, utterly, fruitless and impracticable in its certain, highly, noble principles. Many influencial

Indian leaders of the present age, having been obtaining votes from ignorant masses through highly, corrupt means, have succeeded in making themselves and their near and dear ones immensely, rich in very short periods of five years. Law and order, honesty, justice, discipline, etc. have, mostly, disappeared from, both, the political set up and the administrative system. Influencial public leaders have spoiled in less than half a century, the efficiency, honesty and the feelings of responsibility in the machinery of the governments in the states and the centre by meddling unduly, in the matters of administration. Wrong application of democratic ways of expression by most of the unions of subordinate services have destroyed the essential discipline in most of the government offices and officers of high ranks have become helpless. A conscientious worker in an office has become an exception. Most of the offices do become vacant after the lunch break and no officer can take any action against such a thing. Political diseases have been growing under the utter negligence of so-called leaders for all these decades. Some foreign powers have become our enemies and are trying to spoil our country. Huge numbers of interior enemies of India have been creating immense trouble with the help of such foreign enemies. We are not showing any ability to save the nation from such political diseases, because we have all along been singing the songs of our impracticable idealism even in politics. As has already been said, such songs can suit just a few individuals and not masses. Politics has its own norms, as taught by Lord Krishna and as discussed in Arthaśāstra. Philosophy should not be a one-sided affair. It should take a comprehensive view on life of an individual as well as that of a nation especially, in the matters of politics and administration.

A young philosopher appeared at Vārāṇasī in the early years of the present century. Having got his education at the Queen's Saṁskrit College, Vārāṇasī, under the principalship of M.M. Gopīnāth Kavirāj, he studied Sanskrit grammar, Indian philosophy Sanskrit literature etc. quite efficiently. An account of his initiation by sage Durvāsas in the highest and the perfect aspect of Śāmbhavopāya and also of the results of successful practice in it, has already been given. As has been, previously, discussed, he, combining his views on, both, Vyvahāra and Paramārtha, gave a start to a new trend in Indian philosophy, laying equal emphasis on, both, the mundane aims of the life of a nation, especially, in its proper socio-political and administrative aspects, as well as the higher spiritual attainments of individuals belonging to it. His Neo-Śaivism, is, thus, a comprehensive philosophy of life, capable to yield all its four aims - Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa. He wrote most of his works under his pen-name, Amṛtavāgbhva, a wandering saint; while before that he was known at Vārāṇasī as Viadyanātha Śāstrī Vaṛakale, His works are available at Jammu, Delhi and Jaipur. Rendering, thus a highly, valuable service to Indian philosophy, he presented a comprehensive Indian thought assimilating the essential philosophical views of Upaniṣads. Śaiva-Āgamas Manu-Smṛti, Bhagavadgītā, etc. and advocated some very important political views as propagated, previously, by great personalities like, Lord Krișṇa, Kauṭilya and Samarth Rāmadās. His philosophical views agree, totally, with those of Kashmir Śaivism and add to them some of the broad-minded views expressed in Kauṭilya-Arthaśāstra for the purpose of an all round progress of the nation as a whole and the individuals belonging to it. A note on his important works has already been given.

कर्म-क्रिये——कर्मक्रिये न पृथग्वस्तुद्वयम्, कर्मणः क्रियात्मकत्वात्। यथा—

"·········यतः कर्म क्रियात्मकम्।"

कर्मशोधनम्——फलदानेऽसमर्थतापादनं तेषाम्। तच्च गुरुणा क्रियते। दीक्षाविधौ गुरुणा बुभुक्षोरशुभान्येव कर्माणि शोध्यानि भवन्ति, न शुभानि, मुमुक्षोस्तु तान्यपि। यथा—

"दुष्टानामेव सर्वेषां भूतभव्यभविष्यताम्।
कर्मणां शोधनं कार्यं बुभुक्षोर्न शुभात्मनाम्॥"

(तं०आ० 16, 302, 303)

कर्मदाहः——अज्ञानदशायां कृतं सर्वमपि फलदानायाप्रवृत्तं कर्म ज्ञानोदयसमकालमेव फलोपजननसामर्थ्यरहितं सञ्जायते। स एव कर्मदाह इत्युच्यते। परं प्रारब्धं कर्म तदापि फलदानाय तिष्ठति, न दग्धं भवति। केवलं क्रियमाणं सञ्चितं च कर्मजालं दग्धं भवति। यथा—

"अतो मोहपराधीनो यद्यप्यकृत किंचन।
तथापि ज्ञानकाले तत्सर्वमेव प्रदह्यते॥"

(तं०आ० 9-133, 34)

कर्मनाशः——(1) ज्ञानेनैव कर्मणो भोगदान-सामर्थ्यस्य यो नाशो विधीयते स एव कर्मनाशः। यथा—

"नन्वित्थं प्रदहेज्ज्ञानं कर्मजालानि·········।"

(तं०आ० 13, 13)

कर्मजालानि न दहेत्, केवलं तेषां फलदानसामर्थ्यमेव दहेत्, इति तात्पर्यम्।

(2) ज्ञानाग्निः सर्वाणि सञ्चितान्येव कर्माणि दहति न प्रारब्धानि। तेन सञ्चितकर्मदाह एव योगिनः कर्मनाशः। यथा—

"अज्ञानकालनिचितं धर्माधर्मात्मकं तु कर्मापि।
चिरसञ्चितमिव तूलं नश्यति विज्ञानदीप्तिवशात्॥"

(प०सा०का० 55)

सञ्चीयमानमप्यत्र सञ्चितपदेनोपलक्ष्यते।

~वार्तमानिकाः——अस्मिन्नेव जन्मनि स्वरूपसाक्षात्कारात् प्राक् तदनन्तरं वा क्रियमाणानि कर्माणि नाश्यन्ते साक्षात्कारात्मकेन ज्ञानेन। एवमेव दीक्षायाः प्रागनन्तरं वा कृतान्यत्र त्यानि कर्माणि दीक्षया दाह्यन्ते। यथा—

"तत्रैव देहे यत्त्वन्यदद्यगं वा पुरातनम्।
कर्म तज्ज्ञानदीक्षाद्यैः शण्ठीकर्तुं प्रसह्यते॥"

(तं०आ० 9-131-32)

कर्मनिरोधः——फलपाकोन्मुखतामनायातं सत् कर्म प्रायश्चित्तादिकर्मणा, तपसा वा, स्वशिवत्वप्रत्यभिज्ञया वा मनाङ् निरुध्यते, न च तथा फलं ददाति। यथा—

"अत एव कृतं कर्म कर्मणा तपसापि वा॥
ज्ञानेन वा निरुध्येत फलपाकेष्वनुन्मुखम्।"

(तं०आ० 9-129-30)

"यद्धि यावत् कार्यमेवारब्धुं न प्रवृत्तं तावत्तदारम्भकत्वमेवास्यान्तरा केनचिदुपायेन प्रतिबध्यते इति युक्तस्तन्निरोधः यत्पुनस्तदारब्धुमेव प्रवृत्तं तस्य प्रवृत्तत्वादेव किं निरुध्यते।"

(तं०आ०वि०खं० 6, पृ० 103)

ततः फलदान प्रवृत्तं कर्म न निरोद्धुं शक्यते।

"अग्न्यभिदग्धं बीजं यथा प्ररोहासमर्थतामेति।
ज्ञानाग्नि-दग्धमेवं कर्म न फलप्रदं भवति॥"
(प॰सा॰का॰ 62)

कर्मभूः——कन्याद्वीपापरनाम्नी भारतभूः। यथा—

"नानावर्णाश्रमाचार-सुखदुःखविचित्रता।
कन्याद्वीपे यतस्तेन कर्मभूः सेयमुत्तमा॥"
(तं॰आ॰ 8-91)

कर्ममलसम्बन्धः——सङ्कोच एव हि मलः। तत्संस्कारेण या परिमितकर्तृत्वाभिमानरूपता सैव कर्मणः फलप्रदत्वकारणभूता। सैव स्थितिः कर्मणो मलजन्यता। ततः कर्मणः फलप्रदत्वमेव मलजन्यं न कर्मस्वरूपम्। यथा—

"या त्वस्य कर्मणश्चित्रफलदत्वेन कर्मता॥
प्रसिद्धा सा न संकोचं विनात्मनि मलश्च सः।"

(2) कर्मणः क्रियात्मकत्वात् कर्तैव तस्याश्रयः कारणं च, न मलः, तस्य जडत्वादकर्तृत्वाच्च। यथा—

"किञ्च कर्मापि न मलाद्यतः कर्म क्रियात्मकम्॥ क्रिया च कर्तृतारूपात् स्वातन्त्र्यान्न पुनर्मलात्।"
(तं॰आ॰ 9-98, 99)

कर्मयोगी——प्राप्तस्वात्मपरमेश्वरताविनिश्चयो रागादिराहित्येन लोक-संग्रहार्थं कर्म कुर्वाणः साधकः। असौ समाधियोगनिष्ठाद् योगिनः सकाशादुत्तमः। यथा—
